Guest Editorial

By Len Strazewski

[Editor's note: The following is also the editorial for Trollords #2 from Caliber's Tapestry imprint.]

When I'm not writing comics, newspaper articles, or magazine stories or kibitzing with corporations as a communications consultant, I wile away the remaining lonely hours at another task. I teach a graduate journalism class at Columbia College in Chicago.

The class is a seminar on advanced reporting involving computer data searching and analysis as well as more traditional interviewing techniques.

This past semester, I had 10 students ranging in age from 22 to 44 years old — a few fresh-faced recent college graduates still waiting for their first pro job and a couple of jaded, cynical reporters working to improve their resume with another credential.

On the first day of class, I shocked my students. I asked them to do something that they had been taught never to do — take a side. And I think that scared them at little.

Throughout their training and their careers so far, most of these people have been told by teachers and editors that they are supposed to be objective, reporting the news in a fair and unbiased fashion. Leave the opinions and the choices to the critics and the editorial writers.

I agree that reporters — and just about anybody, for that matter — should be objective when they first look into an issue.

You should give all sides a hearing. But at some point, you need to let your brain, your heart, and your gut take over. You need to use what you have learned and take action.

One of my students was writing an investigative report about the way Chicago police ignore gang-related violence. She uncovered a record of 911 emergency calls in which a police dispatcher wouldn't send a patrol car to a street fight until the caller identified whether or not the participants appeared to be gang members.

How can you be objective about that? Confronted with discrimination, stupidity or even simple bad taste, how can anyone be objective? And why should they be?

Rational people make choices every day and moral people take sides. When they see problems, they seek solutions. That's what I asked my students to do — identify a problem and use their reporting to seek a solution and write about it. That was their term assignment. I admit that this is sort of a radical position for a journalist. I blame comics.

When I started reading comics some 38 years ago, I was attracted to the way Clark Kent the reporter would see a problem, a crime, or some sort of inequity and be able to send in Superman to demonstrate, by example usually, what should be done. I liked the way Bruce Wayne by day seemed to live in high society, far above crimes in the street, and by night, descend into Crime Alley to grapple directly with society's problems.

The Comic Shop Locator Service.

Can you afford to miss out on new customers? Of course, not!

That's why it's important to support ground-breaking services like Diamond's Comic Shop Locator Service. Over the past year, the CSLS toll-free line has referred over 51,000 potential customers to comic book specialty shops just like yours!

Now it's time to re-enlist, and sign up for Year Two. Sponsoring suppliers have even better plans for promoting the Service in 1997, and more and more suppliers are using the CSLS to steer customers to your comics shop.

The cost is minimal— the rewards and benefits are great. More customers, more sales and more profits!

Sign up begins next month! See Diamond's April Previews Order Form to order. Or for more information, contact Diamond's Retailer Promotions Coordinator Allan Greenberg at (800) 45-COMIC.

Here's why comic book specialty retailers love the CSLS!

"I've gotten lots of calls from new people thanks to the Comic Shop Locator Service."
Anthony Veith, The Comic Post

"The Comic Shop Locator Service is a terrific idea. I'm happy with the number of referrals my store has received."
Leon Emmett, Hairy Tarantula Comics and Cards

"This is the kind of promotion we need to expand the market."
Steve Horvath, Collector's Corner

"The Comic Shop Locator Service is a great idea and we're pretty happy with how the sponsoring suppliers have promoted the number. We think tourists have used the Service to find our store when they're visiting from out of town."
George Zotti, Silver Snail Comics

"The Comic Shop Locator Service brings in new people who don't normally buy comics. We'll be signing up again next year." Ilia Carson, Meltdown Comics

New and old creators welcome returning Marvel heroes

By Matt Brady

Mark Waid, Kurt Busiek, and George Pérez have confirmed they will be involved with Captain America, The Avengers, and Iron Man when the titles return from the "Heroes Reborn" universe to the Marvel universe this fall.

Busiek said, "What we all have is what George Pérez calls an agreement in principle. They've offered us these titles and we have accepted, in principle. Nothing has been signed yet. We're all still waiting to hear the deal."

Creative teams at press time were slated to be:

• Captain America: written by Waid, pencilled by Ron Garney.

• The Avengers: written by Busiek, pencilled and co-plotted by Pérez, inked by Bob Wiacek, and colored by Tom Smith.

• Iron Man: written by Busiek.

All the creators expect to be allowed to remain on the comics for as long as they desire. The announcement of an artist for Iron Man and a team for Fantastic Four is expected soon.

The creators expressed considerable excitement about the assignments. "If you asked me to go into the Marvel Supermarket and pick out two comic books to write, the first one I would grab would be Iron Man and then I'd grab Avengers," Busiek said. "Then I'd have to think about it some more. This way, I don't have to think."

Pérez said, "I want to get started right now. Kurt and I have already had some discussions about plots, and he's got some great ideas. My only concern is keeping a monthly schedule, but as I learned on the new Teen Titans title [which he inks], the key is to give me a head start. On Titans, we have a great lead and we've never shipped late. Also, I've told Kurt that I want to draw as many characters as I possibly can, but Kurt was concerned about the individual characterizations of team members, so we compromised. The team will be manageable for him, but you know, they live in a mansion with lots and lots of team pictures on the walls."

The characters will return in September in an as-yet-unnamed four-part weekly mini-series written by Peter David. "We're trying to go in a different direction with the return than we did with the departure and 'Onslaught,'" David said, "A lot of the story will key off of Franklin Richards and his connection to this alternate universe that the heroes have been shunted to. It's going to be a challenge on the one hand, because I want to make it a fairly small, character-driven story, but with cosmic consequences. I want it to be about growth, personal realization, a story about one person making a difference, and ultimately, a story about responsibility."

Following the mini-series, Captain America, Avengers, Iron Man, and Fantastic Four will restart with #1 issues. The series' restarts will most likely be staggered from October through December. Waid assured readers that no one will wake up in the various first issues and say, "What a weird dream!"

"We're in a precarious position," said Waid. "We don't want to say to people who enjoyed the 'Heroes Reborn' stuff that they wasted their money, because they were completely imaginary stories, but at the same time, I'm not going to be tied to any of the continuity Rob [Liefeld] set up. The trick for me is to try to find a way to make a nodding pass that Cap was somewhere else, but he's back."

Busiek agreed. "The characters may not come back in the same shape theywent off in, but at the same time, they won't be coming back as their 'Heroes Reborn' versions," he said. "That's actually not as bad as it sounds. One of the things that generated such huge interest in 'Heroes Reborn' in the first place was that no one knew what was going to happen in that little universe. It was a blank slate. Here we have another one. They'll go through a similar transition that they went through to get to the 'Heroes Reborniverse,' so the big question is: What will they come back as? You don't know."

While the creators expressed enthusiasm about their upcoming assignments, they also realized the implications of working on the titles. "Our goal is to make Avengers, Captain America, Iron Man, and FF amongst Marvel's best-selling titles without it coming off that they're just neighboring titles to the X-universe," Pérez said.

Among the returning titles, there is one conspicuous absence. Spider-Man group editor Ralph Macchio said, "Thor will not have his own title for a while. We want to think about him as a character, so that when we bring back his title, we'll bring him back in a big way, something worthy of the stature of his character. This isn't to say that he'll be completely absent from the Marvel universe; he may be with The Avengers from the get-go or he may be missing, prompting The Avengers to launch a search for him. As with all these series, nothing is set just yet."

Busiek wrapped up the creators' views on their upcoming series by stressing the unpredictability of the returning titles. "They'll be true to their Marvel traditions, but at the same time, the titles will be very accessible. Again, readers have no idea what's going to happen. Wait and see."

Heroes Reassigned

By Matt Brady

Due to Rob Liefeld's departure from Captain America and The Avengers and conflicts within Scott Lobdell's schedule, three of the "Heroes Reborn" titles will see creative shifts for their remaining issues.

WildStorm editor Mike Heisler confirmed that with WildStorm's stewardship of Liefeld's titles, storylines in Captain America and The Avengers will be brought closer in line with Jim Lee's overall storyline for Fantastic Four and Iron Man. The creative teams on the titles will change accordingly. The new creative teams are:

Captain America: written by James Robinson, pencilled by Joe Bennett.

Avengers: written by Walt Simonson, pencilled by Mike Ryan (Grifter).

"We'll be starting with Avengers #8 and Captain America #7," Heisler said. "Marvel has opted not to use Liefeld's Cap #7, since there seems to be some question as to whether or not it was finished. Our Captain America #7 will probably ship a couple of weeks late and will actually be a gallery-type issue that will feature pin-ups by all of our in-house guys here at Wildstorm, and James will write a recap of Cap's career that will tie the issue together. The very last page will feature a scene that everybody's wanted to see since 'Heroes Reborn' started. All I'll say is that it has to do with the letter 'A.'"

Heisler also confirmed that, due to his schedule, Scott Lobdell was forced to abruptly depart from the writing chores on Iron Man. "I don't think there has ever been a time in Scott's career where he's had as much to write as he was writing at the time," Heisler said. "He's got a lot of irons in the fire, and something had to give."

Lobdell was replaced on Iron Man by Jeph Loeb, who finished scripting issue #7 over Lobdell's plot. Heisler added that Lobdell has also left WildC.A.T.S/X-Men. "He basically just finished up what he'd done on issue #2," Heisler said. "Nothing had been firmed up about the remaining two issues, so it was a mutual decision for him to leave the mini-series. Needless to say, when you're talking about the WildC.A.T.S and X-Men, reassigning the last two issues wasn't any real hassle."

WildC.A.T.S/X-Men #3 (set in the present) will be written by James Robinson and pencilled by Adam Hughes, while WildCATS/X-Men #4 (set in the "Days of Future Past" era) will be written by Warren Ellis and pencilled by Travis Charest.

'Wizard' buys Chicago Comicon

Gary Colabuono has announced that the Chicago Comicon has been purchased by Wizard magazine. Nancy Ford will remain as show manager, and, Colabuono said, "I'll be around shaking hands and schmoozing, as usual."

Sources report other parties interested in purchasing the show included a local consortium and at least one other major convention organizer.

Colabuono said, "The past five years have been wonderful for me. During my tenure as a partner, I've seen the show grow into something I never thought possible."

According to Colabuono, the convention's use of the Comicon name is no longer in dispute, since Comic-Con International: San Diego has dropped its registration of the term.

The show is scheduled to be held at the Rosemont Convention Center July 4, 5, and 6.

Gemstone folds 'Fan'

Gemstone Publishing has announced that Overstreet's Fan will cease publication with its 24th issue, scheduled to ship in April.

Gemstone Chief Administrative Officer John Snyder said, "Market conditions have been somewhat stagnant since Fan debuted in 1995.

"Despite this tough environment, our sales have grown to a very respectable level, but not high enough, frankly, to support the level of quality we were committed to providing."

Snyder said most staff members will be retained by Gemstone or offered positions at Diamond Comic Distributors, Gemstone's independently operated sister company.

"On behalf of Steve Geppi, Bob Overstreet, and the Gemstone management team, I want to thank and commend the staff of Fan for their efforts," he said. "They put out a high-quality, entertaining magazine each month, while juggling many other tasks simultaneously."

Snyder said the suspension of Fan will allow Gemstone to focus its energies on its other publishing projects.

GUEST EDITORIAL

Heroes take sides. Heroes make moral choices. That was the first adult lesson I ever learned.

I make choices all the time — particularly creative choices. I don't see Robert DeNiro movies because I found Taxi Driver to be a repulsive film, for example. I walked out of Pulp Fiction because I thought the script was stupid and senselessly violent.

Lately I've been making some choices about comics.

In the past year or so, I've stopped reading Superman comics because the stories have stopped being about the way heroes grapple with problems and have turned into soap opera. I've stopped reading Batman comics because the title character has turned into a violent psychotic who shouldn't be allowed to be around teen-age boys, let alone put them into costumes and use them as bait for The Joker.

I've also stopped trying to write for the big comics companies.

After several years of writing for DC, Malibu, and other publishers, I've just stopped calling editors, writing proposals, trying to make sales. It's hard to side with publishers, editors and other creators whose work I no longer can read.

Instead, when I have time, I'm going to write for independent publishers and not charge for my work. I like taking sides and I choose to side with publishers and creators whose work I respect — like the magazine you are holding in your hand right now. Many of these comics aren't making much money, but not all choices are about money.

My students have to learn to make choices in their careers, to take sides when their hearts and minds show them that they must. They will have to learn to take orders and refuse orders.

They will have to learn to fight and to concede. They will have to take sides and pay the price for taking sides.

Essayist Joseph Epstein, my friend and my former teacher, once wrote:

We do not choose to be born.
We do not choose our parents,
Or our times or country of birth,
Or the circumstances of our upbringing.
We do not — most of us — choose to die
Or the time and conditions of our death.
But within all this realm of choicelessness
We do choose how we shall live —
Courageously or in cowardice,
Honorably or dishonorably,
With purpose or adrift.
We decide what is important and what is trivial.
What makes us significant is what we do,
Or what we refuse to do.
We decide and we choose
And so we give definition to our lives."

If I have any lesson to communicate by my teaching, my writing, or my own life choices, that's it.

Market Guide

Dealers report a buyer's market in comic-book back issues and comic-strip originals, with demand on the rise for Detective Comics but not for Daredevil.

Back issues:

Blake Shira, Lost Dutchman Comics, 745 W. Camelback Rdl, Phoenix, AZ 85013.

Shira reported "so-so" business at Lost Dutchman, but said mail-order sales are being helped by the store's Internet presence.

"The walk-in traffic is off," said Shira. "There are lots of people walking around trying to sell '80s and '90s sludge."

In Golden Age, Shira reported high or increasing demand for Action Comics, Batman, Detective Comics, Superman, and Timelys. Shira said he has seen decreasing demand for original Classics Illustrateds and MLJ titles.

In Silver Age, Atlas comics are rising in popularity among Lost Dutchman customers, while demand for Journey into Mystery is dropping.

Also waning in popularity are such previously sought-after modern titles as Lady Death, Evil Ernie, Shi, and Gen¹³, Shira reported.

James Reeves, 328 Allegheny St. Huntingdon, PA 16652.

While business is "improving," for Reeves, he described what is primarily a buyer's market, with comics easier to buy than to sell.

Reeves reported Golden Age titles to be in high demand across the board.

In Silver Age, most DC titles are doing well, as are Amazing Spider-Man issues, said Reeves. Demand is off, however, for Daredevil, he said.

In modern titles, Reeves' customers are looking for New Mutants, Sandman, and Hellblazer. The Punisher, however, is losing popularity, he said.

Jef Hinds, PO Box 44803, Madison, WI 53744.

Hinds described business as "busy," and said, "We always need more good stuff." He said he hopes to boost business further via a new web page.

Golden Age sales are "pretty stable in general," said Hinds, with DC titles in the greatest demand. Particular stand-out titles are Batman and Detective Comics, he said.

Batman and Detective Comics are also in demand among Silver Age titles, according to Hinds, as are Amazing Spider-Man and Fantastic Four. Hinds said he finds some middle-grade Silver Age Marvels, such as Daredevil and Captain America, harder to sell at guide prices.

Original art:

Mark Cohen, PO Box 1892-B, Santa Rosa, CA 95402.

Cohen, who specializes in original comic-strip art, said business is "excellent! January sales were record-breaking, the best month I've had."

Enjoying high or increasing demand among Cohen's customers are original art works from Peanuts, Non Sequitur, Rose is Rose, and For Better or For Worse. Also popular are Eisner art and original Playboy cartoons, he said. Non Sequitur "Homer" Sunday pages sell as fast as they become available, said Cohen.

Overall, Cohen said, demand appears to be steady. "The consensus among collectors that I've asked is that current comic-strip originals are still a very good buy."

Recent noteworthy sales

In Golden Age, Jef Hinds reported sales of Astonishing #4 for $480 and Yogi Berra in Fine condition for $160.

In Silver Age, Hinds reported sales of House of Mystery #2 in Very Fine condition for $450 and Batman #105 in F+ for $395.

Blake Shira of Lost Dutchman Comics reported sales of Incredible Hulk #1 in Fine condition for $1,650 and Amazing Spider-Man #1 in Good condition for $850.

James Reeves reported selling several Silver Age DC titles such as The Atom and Showcase at "close to guide prices."

In comic strip original art, Mark Cohen reported sales of Pogo daily originals for $750 and higher and Sunday originals for $1,750 and up. He also reported sales of Sy Barry Phantom originals for $250 to $550.

I remember reading the first issue of Trollords more than 10 years ago. Brian Augustyn, an old friend and, at the time, a commercial illustrator, asked me to take a look at some photocopied artwork produced by a couple of young writer-artists who were looking to break into comics.

Back then, I was working as a magazine editor and, as a journeyman journalist, I had developed the jaded cynicism that comes with the territory. I had been reading comics since — well — since I could read and had thought once or twice about trying to write comics but never really followed up. Comics, I felt, was an insider's game, dominated by people who lived in New York and who had connections at Marvel and DC. And my own interest in reading comics was starting to wane. I attributed that to getting older and more pragmatic, but I think the real problem was that I was just getting bored with the direction in which most comics were heading.

Then there were Scott Beaderstadt and Paul Fricke, these two Trollords guys, with the crazy idea that they could write and draw their own stories, print them, and get a bunch of distributors to get them to comics shops. I thought their plans were wildly optimistic in the face of nearly hopeless odds. How many people actually have careers in comics and how many self-publishers actually get attention by the closed shop of the comics industry?

And the Trollords story — a fantastic tale of life in the face of death, hope in the face of despair, companionship in the realm of loneliness, and the sacred in the world of the profane — how could this compete with the grim-and-gritty stuff that had become the standard among the big publishers?

Pulitzer Prize-winning playwright Edward Albee, delivering the keynote address to the Chicago Humanities Festival in November, said that he thought being an artist required extreme optimism: first, confidence that an audience existed for your work and, second, a firm belief that you had something worthy to say.

The arts, Albee said, are a way to communicate about ourselves to ourselves, "a way of holding a mirror up to ourselves, so we can see and understand ourselves, challenge and rethink our values and beliefs," and, in general, explore life in new ways with new perspectives drawn from the arts. To not explore the world and ourselves this way is to experience "death in life," Albee said, a fate perhaps worse than a physical death.

When I reread the original Trollords story, which Scott and Paul called "a matter of life and death," I see that they had gone exploring with all of the skills at their command and had created a life-size mirror by which we could see, understand, and rethink our hopes, fears, and values — all of the philosophical glue that holds together the pieces of our lives.

Trollords hit during the black-and-white comics revolution of the 1980s and, along with Cerebus and Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles, helped create a new generation of independent comics. My friendship with the Trollords creators launched my own brief comics-writing career. Their optimism rubbed off a bit on me.

Now, after a hiatus, Trollords is back with Scott Beaderstadt, one of its original creators, at the helm, and I hope its appearance is the beginning of a whole new era of optimism. I have returned to my own jaded, cynical ways, and, if anything, comics have become less compelling than ever. When I look into the mirror of comics as an artistic medium, I don't see anything I recognize — just a sad gaggle of inhumans fighting each other, over and over, with no connection to life as I know it. Could this be a reflection of what's left of comics readership, that little cult that buys mutant, vigilante, or "Bad Girl" titles and stands in line for autographs on the comics that they collect but don't read?

Who knows? Comics is more of an insider's game than ever, and I'm just another outsider these days. However, I am pleased that Scott remains optimistic and I am confident he has something to say with these new stories. And I hope he finds an audience again that wants to join his exploration of life, death, and other matters of heart and soul.

I'll be part of that audience. And maybe I'll rethink some of my own cynical ways — as I take a second look in the Trollords mirror.

Oh, So? From Page 12

liceman, thanks a lot for nothing! You just got me to sprout a couple of white hairs.

I felt the need to celebrate but I wasn't sure what or where. A couple days later, I went to a comics shop in Oakland (Hi, Dr. Comics & Mr. Games) and brought four excellent comics:

• Paul Pope's P City Parade. Every time I enter any comics shop, absolutely the first thing I search for are any of the latest Pope comics.

• The latest issue of Starman.

• First issue of The Shade, a mini-series spin-off from Starman.

• Kurt Busiek's Astro City. The writer, artist, and even the colorist are getting better and better.

And guess what? Each these comic books really takes more than 10 minutes to read. These are perfect times for me to celebrate.

Andy Mangels

In response to your "Star Wars in the comics" issue (#1216), let me give Associate Editor John Jackson Miller a hearty pat on the back for a good spate of articles. It was nice to read enthusiastic stories that didn't overly denigrate Marvel's comics for Dark Horse's versions.

However, there are a couple of inconsistencies I'd like to point out. When I was hired by Lucasfilm to write Star Wars: The Essential Guide to Characters (Ballantine/Del Rey, $18), we had many discussion about whether or not to include the Marvel comics. My contention was that, since I was doing the ultimate reference guide to the characters, I should fit in the Marvel stories if it did not cause any major continuity problems. That agreed to, I then did utilize several Marvel stories in my character biographies.

According to Miller, "[Marvel stories] are thus far not to be found in Lucasfilm-authorized tomes cataloguing the Star Wars universe." As examples from my book show, this is not at all true. I referenced Shira Brie/Lumiya, and the Lando and Lobot entries refer to the return to Bespin storyline. There are references to Fenn Shysa (the other Mandalorian-armored character from the late issues) in both the Boba Fett entry and in the Boba Fett: Twin Engines of Destruction comic-book special I wrote recently (Dark Horse). There were references to some of the bounty hunter stories in their entries, as well as some Jabba the Hutt material, and there were glancing references to comics continuity in most of the Rebel leaders' biographies.

Second, in the sidebar about Blackthorne's 3-D Star Wars comics (page 46), if Miller had read the bibliography in my book (the most complete listing of Star Wars publications), he would have seen a listing for Star Wars 3-D #1-3 (Blackthorne Publishing, Dec 1987-Fall 1988). All three issues exist and are in my collection. I even refer to one of them in my book — in Luke Skywalker's entry, if memory serves.

Finally, in Miller's Faraway Looks (page 94), he discusses the film novels and says, "The original Del Rey novels were prized by film fans for the little details included by adapters George Lucas (or Alan Dean Foster, if you believe that rumor) ..." Again, this is a simple matter of knowing where to look. In Del Rey's hardcover rerelease of Star Wars (Sep 1995), George Lucas writes a new introduction. In it, he states, "The book was ghostwritten by Alan Dean Foster from my screenplay for the film." Can't get much clearer than that, can you?

Since Miller is a Star Wars fan, I'd suggest he rustle up a copy of my book, now in its third printing and available at Waldenbooks, Barnes & Noble, and many chain bookstores. It'll be a treat for him to read all about the various characters from the films, comics, novels, cartoons, and TV special. And, to top it off, he'll have the best — and most complete — reference guide to Star Wars publishing that has appeared to date.

[JJM: Well, here's where the fact that it's financially unhealthy to be a Star Wars completist becomes an occupational hazard. My sources ranged from my tattered copy of Raymond Velasco's Guide to the Star Wars Universe (1984) to several of the more recent West End gaming volumes. With the growing universe of products, we can't always tell when one source has been trumped by another — especially when the publisher doesn't always tell us what's just been published, a separate but related complaint. For example, Del Rey sent the review copy of the softcover I reviewed, but this is the first we've heard of the hardcover or the new introduction therein. It's nice to see that, after 18 years, fans can finally ask Foster to autograph their copies of Star Wars without hesitation!

I'm glad to hear some of the Marvel tales have been "recognized" by Lucasfilm. Jo Duffy did say several of her characters had appeared in some of the Galaxy trading cards, so I began to doubt there were absolute "firewalls" around the Marvel Star Wars chronology. I don't quite see how all the stories that supposedly occurred between Empire and Jedi can be crammed into the same period of time, but at least they don't have "Stardates" to worry about.

As for Star Wars in 3-D #2-3, it's long been the CBG Price Guide's policy not to use published third-party sources to confirm the existence of an issue. (We have known sources to include an issue in a database based solely on its solicitation — which, obviously, is no guarantee of publication.) CBG relies on readers in large measure to confirm from their own collections that a issue not provided to us by the publisher did appear; as you may have read in #1218, they've already helped us fill in these "blanks." There will be more to come, I'm sure.

(On the other hand, I shamefacedly wish I'd double-checked any resource before confidently misspelling "Tatooine" on every reference in that issue. I'd blame it on the early Marvels I was reading, which spelled Jabba's species as "Hut" and bounced between "lightsaber" and "lightsabre" — but let's chalk this one up to the Deadline Doom. Just another reason more CBG cover stories aren't generated internally!)]

This is an open letter to those of you (or should I say to those of us) who aspire to work in the industry as professional artists and writers. As I read letters in CBG, I have noticed similar problems that all of us face.

While my interest in becoming a comics professional is a passing one, my best friend has more than just a passing interest, and he is going through stressful times. Before I begin what I want to say, I would like to provide some background information about this artist and writer. My friend (who shall remain nameless for obvious reasons) is a graduate from a major university, where he had majored in Art (painting and drawing as an emphasis) and English (a writing emphasis). He has worked as a graphic designer and computer artist and has been commissioned for many private illustrations, portraits, and design work.

Oh, So?

I met him in an English class in college, and I, like him, was an Art major (with a painting — BFA — emphasis). My friend is currently making a living by teaching high school in one of the largest cities in the United States. He is a talented individual, not even close to 30 yet.

My friend is already a professional artist — just not within the comics field. He is not an untrained individual who has learned how to draw by copying another comics artist's work (although I told him that he should do so if he wanted to get work — but that is an issue best addressed at another time).

We are confused and need help with some questions.

My friend has submitted work to various publishers for the past 10 months (he has submitted in the past but not on a monthly basis), and he has met with success and failure. His failure is evident, because he has not earned any work to date. His "sucesses" are a different matter. Just like most people who send in material, he has received form letters. But he has also received handwritten messages from editors at both Marvel and DC Comics. Many people, including me, have told him that this was a good sign — and, let's be honest, in this climate, it is.

Not long ago, he showed Paris Cullins his work; Cullins explained to my friend that he was already doing work on a professional level. Of course, there were things that he needed to work on, but who doesn't have such things? Cullins told him that he should go to more conventions to solicit more work. He did. And he will continue to do so.

Recently, we both had the opportunity to meet Doug Moench, Kelley Jones, and Jim Balent from DC Comics. Although he was a bit reluctant, he took samples down to the store signing event. Many stories about comic-book professionals circulate at stores, conventions, and publications — and not all of them favorable stories. I was worried someone was going to be unnecessarily rude. But to my surprise, both Jones and Balent were fantastic. They were the nicest and most helpful professionals that we had met.

My friend approached them, while I stood nearby eagerly listening to what they had to offer. At this point in his development as a comic-book artist, my friend doesn't have major faults with his work. He should be working. But he politely asked tham for as many pointers and tips as they could give him in improving his work and procuring work as a professional.

They both had thought he was already doing work. Imagine that: Two established, credible artists, with more than 30 years of creating comics between them and the creators of two popular comic books, thought my friend was a fellow industry artist.

When I asked if there was any reason my friend should not be published, they could find no reason. When my friend asked if there were problems like anatomical inaccuracies, perspective problems, or just bad drawing, both responded with an emphatic "no." Like all good critiques, this wasn't just a one-sided exchange. They pointed out areas that he could spend more time developing — like inking — but for the most part, they agreed that he already had the "tools."

This was a wonderful experience and confidence builder, but we are still confused. The feedback that my friend has been getting has put us both into something of a quandry. One editor has sent notes saying things like, "Don't submit for another year. You are not ready."

What?

How could there be such a wide difference of opinions? Even if I did not respect the people who have expressed admiration, and I do, common sense should tell me that their opinions should have, at least, some value. Are we wrong to think so? I have a degree in art and am an established painter. These industry professionals have training and job experience (and no motivation to tell untruths). We all agree that my friend should have some work. But now an editor says he is so far away from "getting in" that he needs another year of practice?

I will also mention during the last 10 months the submissions editor of one large publisher has not returned any of the self-addressed, stamped envelopes that my friend has sent. Let me inform everyone that before my friend sends material to any publisher, he requests a copy of the particular guidelines for the company he is going to send something to — and adhered to those guidelines. For this publisher the guidelines state, "Submissions that do not include an SASE will get no response." The guidelines also state, "You'll receive an answer as soon as we can evaluate your work. This may take several weeks." I don't know how much a "several" is, but it has to be at least 40, because that is how many weeks it has been since he has been sending work without getting a response.

For the past 10 months, he has received the same form letter from a different large company over and over again. The letter tells him to fill in his dark areas, not send pin-ups, and always include a cover letter. I know for a fact that he has always adhered to these rules — I have often seen his submissions samples. What does a person have to do to get the attention of editors? I hope that, at some point, someone will see his work and recognize his ability and potential and will be getting back to him soon. But somehow, I doubt it.

I'd like to solicit advice from people who may be able to shed a "new" light on his situation. (Please don't suggest the small press; although people there have liked his work, they have not been in a position to hire him.)

I thank you, fellow readers, and I hope to hear from you soon.

[CBG has been running stories for more than a year involving cutbacks in the field. Retailers and consumers alike have called for the largest publishers to decrease the number of titles they publish. The publishers have accommodated this economic pressure, trimming "excess" titles, streamlining their lines.

This means that more and more people who have been regular industry creators — writers and artists alike — who had been making house payments and feeding their kids from regular income derived from the series they had produced for months and years have been deprived of that income. Not all such folks are out of work, by any means. But editors who remain (and many staffers have lost their jobs in recent years) are (1) frequently overloaded with work and (2) keeping an eye out for freelance jobs they can place with dependable, skilled professionals with whom they have worked successfully in the past.

The last thing on the "to do" list of many of those editors is to find work for people with whom they've had no experience. Perhaps they should just shoot every submission back with the note, "Sorry! We have no openings for the foreseeable future!" In a way, I suspect that's what that company is trying to convey by repeatedly sending the same form letters. But I also suspect that the people involved don't want to discourage someone who could, as you say, produce good work for their company at some point in the future.

At one point, DC's guidelines for writers gave information on submissions and suggestions of good educational material — but also included the flat statement that DC wasn't looking for more writers at that point. Perhaps that would be a realistic response for many artists in today's field, too.]

I was appalled by what I read about Joel Schumacher and George Clooney. Schumacher said he's making Batman & Robin a "far merrier romp than the first three films." A direct quote from Clooney is, "We got rid of the moodiness that Batman had ... we've seen enough of the Bat-brooding. What does Batman have to be depressed about?" (March/April Cinescape).

Where is the fan outrage? How can these men be trusted with the Batman film series? I thought we could count on Denny O'Neil to straighten them out, but I guess he's more concerned with getting Bane into the movie.

Why can't Hollywood just accept Batman? Why must it always question his essence, then water him down into a clown cop? Do the Star Trek producers say "The hell with the fans, let's rip off ID4"? Why can't Warner Bros. just get Tim Burton and Sam Hamm, who respect the fans and the Batman characters, and do the Batman movies the way they are supposed to be done?

Why do we have to go through this with Schumacher and Clooney? This movie must flop at the box office (thank God for The Lost World) or else it's all over for The Dark Knight, and camp will be here forever.

[Please understand that the folks who do comic books have little power over what is done in the world of filmmaking.

We commented at the end of the preceding movie that it had clearly been designed to set the stage for a brighter, happier Batman — one in which everyone's psychological problems were solved. And that*, in turn, was clearly designed to make it possible to return to the world of the 1966-8 TV show.*

Pow. Bam. Sock.]

Wednesday, I watched Entertainment Tonight, as it broadcast the theatrical trailer for the upcoming Batman and Robin movie. Based on the footage shown, it seems apparent that, in creating his "living comic book," director Joel Schumacher has taken his cue, in large part, from the Batman TV series (1966-8).

Given that a good number of other comic-book fans also saw, or will see, the trailer and given the mentality of the "DC Comics fundamentalists" (as Michael Keaton described them), there are bound to be folks all across the country (many of whom will no doubt write to CBG themselves) who will once again start moaning about the Batman show and how awful it was, how it "damaged" or "set back" the comics industry, and how, because of its influence, Batman and Robin will do nothing but perpetuate the notion that comic books are simply mindless trash and yatta-yatta-yatta.

To these folks, let me just say: Grow up!

Do all you naysayers honestly believe that comic books would have been regarded with respect by the general public for the last 30 years, if the Batman show had never existed? I'm not quite that delusional. As for Batman and Robin's potential influence, indulge me for a moment.

Imagine that you're a moviegoer who doesn't read comic books; don't know about them, don't care about them. You've just seen B&R. You hated it. But you don't automatically say to yourself, "Boy, comic books must really be trash!" Why? Because this would be a complete non sequitur, given your utter indifference to the existence of comic books.

Or try it another way: You're a non-comics reader who's just seen B&R and you loved it. You can't really expect me to believe that your next thought is going to be, "Wow! Comic books must be the greatest thing since sliced bread. I'm going to start reading comic books right now. Not only that, but I'm going to tell all my friends to start reading them, too." Again, non sequitur.

Do you begin to perceive the logic?

Let me clue you in, boys and girls: The reason comic books aren't taken seriously — why Joe Average still thinks they're just silly kid stuff — is that — hold on to your hats — the majority of companies that publish comic books in this country haven't done anything substantial to change that perception.

Whoa! Hope I didn't blow too many of your minds with that revelation, but it's true. If you want to look for the causes of our industry's problems — and the solutions to those problems — start looking within.

As for Batman and Robin, I will, indeed, watch it in the theater when it comes to town. Unlike some people, though, I'll reserve my judgments until after I've seen it.

In the spirit of trying to chew the "Top 10" gag to the bone, 10 headlines I'd like to see in CBG:

10. John Larroquette is Doctor Who.

9. New Issue of Buck Godot out.

8. DNAgents/Crossfire project off the ground from (choose one) DC or Dark Horse or Image or Homage or Vertigo or anywhere.

7. Tron and Black Hole soundtracks released on CD.

6. Garth Ennis to write "Uncle Scrooge Adventures."

5. Dave Sim will be new Marvel President.

4. Harlan Ellison duets with Snoop Doggy Dogg on rap concept album Crips o' Blood's a Rover.

3. Image buys Fantagraphics — Gary Groth to write Spawn.

2. Black Lightning returns to DC with Isabella.

And the number one headline I'd like to see in CBG is:

1. Frank Miller announces Vice-Presidential bid on Larry King — will run with George Carlin.

The many recent letters to CBG concerning the treatment given to certain characters, killing and/or revamping, has caused me to write this letter. I believe that changes like those in comics should occur and can be beneficial. The key to this, though, is how the companies handle the situation.

The deaths of Flash, Phoenix, Superman, Marv, and Sandman all show how this can be done in a decent fashion. On the other hand, Hal Jordan's downfall is a great example of how not to do it.

The revamping of characters, as in the Heroes Reborn storyline, also does not bother me in concept. The starting over of FF or Captain America does not erase the 400 previous issues from memory; it just gives creators a clean slate to work with. The obvious problem being: not enough creators out there have the talent to put great work on that clean slate.

There is great talent out there, which gives us readers an easy way to show our unhappiness — follow your favorite creator from title to title. To me this makes much more sense than continuing to read the same comic book for its character if you don't like what being done to him or her. This does two things: It makes the readers happier and shows the companies that creative talent is what draws readers. The confusing mess that is The X-Men does not make me quit comics or lessen my enjoyment of the Claremont-Byrne issues, it does, however, make me not read about the current X-Men.

The anxiety fans feel about the killing, injuring, or any changes at all of characters also has me baffled. Doesn't it strike anyone else as silly, with all these comics filled with super-humans, that people are rarely even injured? Wouldn't comics more enjoyable if you knew that any time you opened a comic book a character might die, instead of knowing that, no matter what occurs, the good guys will win and no one will be hurt? Wouldn't stories about how characters deal with affects of aging and injury be more interesting than reading about the latest lame way the companies came up with to keep all their characters young?

I recently made a wonderful discovery that I wanted to share with other comic-book readers. There is a comic book that I want to recommend. The comics that are at the top of my reading-enjoyment list are: Akiko, Kurt Busiek's Astro City, Bone, Barry Windsor-Smith: Storyteller, Leave It to Chance, Monkey Man & O'Brien, Nexus, Shi, Strangers in Paradise, and Starman. If you share my tastes, then you are going to love Kabuki.

This is a comic book that I was overlooking, because, at first glance, it appeared to be more interested in exploiting the female form and selling different first issues than with telling an attractive, intelligent, and entertaining story. I was so wrong! David Mack has incredible talent and an obvious love for this medium. He did a sequence in Circle of Blood #6 that is the most powerful sequence I have ever seen done in comics, and I've been reading for more than 20 years. It concerns the heroine's resolve and the person she has become. Unforgettable!

If you haven't been reading this comic book, you are depriving yourself of a wonderful comics experience. I can't recommend it any more highly.

• Tomb Tales #1 (Apr-May 97, Cryptic, black and white, $3) is an obvious attempt to recapture the glory days of E.C. horror comics. The front cover is by George Evans, and the back is a painting by Al Feldstein (which is, by the way, available as a lithograph), and both they and much of the issue's contents are filled with rotting bodies threatening people whose lives will end immediately. Those contents are, like the E.C. horror stories that preceded them, self-contained short stories written anonymously (in this case, "Crumblin' Charlie") and illustrated by an assortment of artists.

"What Cryptic set out to do is worth attempting, at least for those to whom oogly boogly horror stories have a cachet unmatched by other entertainment."
— Maggie Thompson

The author is knowledgeable about the format, obviously a devoted E.C. fan — and the Evans work is stunning, if not necessarily something you'd want hanging on your wall. Even the lettering (though done by hand) tries to evoke E.C.'s machine-generated lettering. The problem is that none of the interior scripts and art comes anywhere near the quality of the material (corny though it was in the horror material) that made E.C. the industry icon that it is today: a triumph of art and twist-ending stories (granting that, in the horror stories, the socko endings were hardly unexpected).

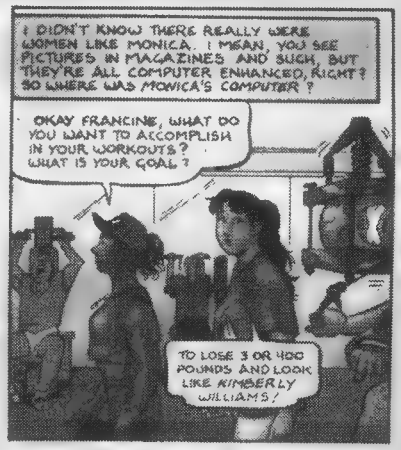
What Cryptic set out to do is worth attempting, at least for those to whom oogly boogly horror stories have a cachet unmatched by other entertainment and whose appetites are not sufficiently satisfied by the (you should pardon the expression) body of existing E.C. material. Tomb Tales could provide a focal point for that audience and it could attract skilled creators in the genre as time goes by.

• Despite Extreme's having left Image, I suspect that Supreme: The New Adventures (#44, Jan 97, Maximum, $2.50) suffers from the preconceptions of fans who assume it is same-old, same-old Image material. (By the way, Image has come a long way from same-old, same-old days — which was wildly successful from, yes, preconceptions of fans. In the beginning, those preconceptions involved investment profits. Actual readers having taken over much of what remains of the field, the new preconception is that many Image titles have nothing besides investment potential — and nothing at all for readers. But that's at the same time that Imageers and ex-Imageers have worked to make their titles an ever-richer mix of material.)

In this case, one of the field's top writers, Alan Moore, has made Supreme a title not to be missed by true comics buffs. It's packed with his takes on comics traditions, with Moore approaching a variety of storytelling styles and offering new (solid) stories in these genres. In this issue, the art support comes from Richard Horie, Norm Rapmund, Rick Veitch, and Bill Wray — and the frame is that, still suffering from "reality revision," Supreme is joined by other superbuddies, as he looks at a scrapbook of the past. The scrapbook, though, brings memories (inserted short stories) more evocative of E.C. than of, say, Silver Age DC. (Yes, right down to the lettering.)

The art on the Tales from the Crypt-type material doesn't quite capture the feel of that material; it's not quite Ingels, not quite Davis. And the art from the Shock SuspenStories pastiche isn't up to Craig. This is not to say the stories aren't terrific. Quite the reverse. It's more to say that the Wally Wood and Harvey Kurtzman imitation in "Supremelvin!!!" is simply the finest and most entertaining accomplishment of this rich installment. Doing a parody of a parody is a task few would approach; this team does it (you should pardon the expression) supremely well. Wow.

• Terry Moore's Strangers in Paradise (Vol. 3, #3, Jan 97, $2.75) was one of the breakout titles among the herd of indistinguishable self-published titles that emerged before the last glut. It swiftly accumulated such an audience of fervent fans, male and female, that Moore eventually had to announce he would no longer be able to handle a subscription service on Strangers; maintaining so many subscriptions took more time than he could set aside for the project each issue.



Such problems no longer interfere with the distribution of the adventures of Francine, Katchoo, and David, since it appears with Image and Homage imprints. This episode begins, "My dad used to say, home is where you go at the end of the day, no matter how good or bad your day was. In the end, if you were lucky, you got to go home. I never thought about it much until one day he didn't come home. I guess he wasn't so lucky that day." And it continues with such clear, concise, thought-provoking storytelling in a continuing story which is rare among continuing stories, in that new readers can jump on and become comfortable with the characters and situations almost wherever such readers decide to check it out. In this installment, Francine (feeling out of shape) goes to a fitness center in a sequence delightfully combining torments of body and spirit.

• Solar, Man of the Atom Vol. 2 (May 97, Valiant/Acclaim, $3.95 — and why is the first word of the title, according to the indicia, missing from the consarned front cover?) is written by Warren Ellis, pencilled by Darick Robertson, and inked by Larry Mahlstedt and Steve Geiger. Editor-in-Chief Fabian Nicieza says it's the first of the company's "event issues," which he describes as "self-contained stories of a 'big' nature."

Continuing: "Other companies give you all their characters running around hitting each other indiscriminately for a Gajilion issues. We give you a brother and a sister exploring the meaning and ramifications of the existence of God." Nicieza concludes that it's a prelude to the company's events of the summer.

He's absolutely right about the lacks of many other industry crossovers, big events, etc. A problem with this comic book, though, is that it's only sort of self-contained and it's not clearly penetrable by someone who hasn't been following the company's characters. Moreover, we're once again getting cigar smoking as characterization and slimy priests as gratuitous plot devices, the first of which was a big yawn decades ago, and the second of which competes with characters running around hitting each other indiscriminately for a Gajilion issues as the foremost cliché of today's field.

Nevertheless, there are striking images in this story addressing the hunt for signs of God and the problems raised by the existence of alternate timelines and the nature of time itself. Especially if you've been following the assorted intertwined characters of the world of the Valiant imprint, you're not going to want to miss this one. Or the next "event" issue, Operation: Stormbringer, written by Mark Waid and Brian Augustyn, which will involve the X-O skeleton and ships in late April.

• Quickly noted is the wrap-up of the first Leave It to Chance arc (#4, Feb 97, Image/Homage, $2.50) by James Robinson and Paul Smith. It'll be out in paperback this spring, if you've missed the fantasy adventure series to this point. Meantime, the title (which began as a limited series) has been such a success it will continue. Yay! This is one I grab out of the stack of incoming comics as soon as I see it.

... And We Quote

"One of the things we try to demonstrate in our yarns is that nobody is all good or all bad. Even a shoddy villain can have a redeeming trait, just as any howlin' hero might have his nutty hangups. One of the greatest barriers to real peace and justice in this troubled world is the feeling that everyone on the other side of the ideological fence is a 'bad guy.' We don't know if you're far-out radical, or Mr. Establishment himself — if you're a black militant or a jolly John Bircher — but, whatever you are, don't get bogged down by kindergarten labels!"

DC has 'Revelations' about 'Kingdom Come'

Three editions of the Elseworlds mini-series collection are planned

"We've been allowed an opportunity to put down for the record all of the extra story concepts behind each character design from the series and expand upon those which everyone thought they already knew everything about!"
— Alex Ross

DC Comics and Graphitti Designs are preparing three collected versions of Kingdom Come with 12 new pages of story and art. The additional material will allow creators Mark Waid and Alex Ross to elaborate in two areas that space would not previously permit in the original four-issue series. The new material answers how The New Gods saga fits into Kingdom Come together with an epilogue that follows up on the post-apocalyptic life of the Kingdom Come principal characters.

Released last year, Kingdom Come was set in a possible future of the DC universe and featured The Spectre guiding Norman McCay, an elderly reverend, through a world populated by the heroes of McCay's youth and their descendants, many of whom did not agree with their predecessors' ideas of right and wrong. The Elseworlds mini-series ended with a catacylsmic battle between the two differing camps, a battle which a group of older super-villains used to its advantage.

The three versions of the collected Kingdom Come each contain the 12 new pages as well as a host of other features. Each version is scheduled to ship as follows:

- Kingdom Come: The Deluxe Slipcase Edition — May 29.
- Kingdom Come hardcover — July 2.
- Kingdom Come trade paperback — Aug. 13.

According to Graphitti Designs President Bob Chapman, "The new pages add a depth to the existing story that will be a special treat to those who purchase any of the three collected editions."

Graphitti Designs is producing and designing Kingdom Come: The Deluxe Slipcase Edition for DC. The deluxe edition is a signed and numbered two-book package. Included in each slipcased set are Kingdom Come and Kingdom Come: Revelations. The 216-page Kingdom Come hardcover features the complete Kingdom Come story. Each book includes a full-color signature page with new artwork by Ross that is sequentially numbered and signed by both Waid and Ross. Exclusive to this deluxe edition is an introduction by the Reverend Clark Ross, Alex Ross' father, who was both the model and the inspiration for Norman McCay. Other details rounding out this edition include gold gilt edges and a bound-in ribbon marker, illustrated endpapers featuring new art by Ross, and a debossed Superman "S" on the hardcover.

Kingdom Come: Revelations, a companion volume to Kingdom Come, is an exclusive part of Kingdom Come: The Deluxe Slipcase Edition. The 96-page book collects Ross' character sketches for Kingdom Come. The book opens with a text piece by Mark Waid giving readers a report of the genesis of Kingdom Come.

More than 60 pages of preliminary character sketches with personal commentary by Alex Ross follow the Waid introduction. Chapman said, "The word 'sketches' is a misnomer and should not be applied to these detailed works of art.

"Special care has been taken to reproduce these delicate pencils as faithfully as possible. A special fifth color has been used in the printing process to ensure that what you see in Revelations will be as close as possible to the original artwork."

The character sketches are separated into five sections: The League, A Silent Cavalry, Titans, Wild Cards, and A New Breed.

Other material in Revelations includes:

- "Keys to the Kingdom," a five-page annotated guide to the characters and props which pop up throughout Kingdom Come.
- "Gallery," an eight-page section containing full-page reproductions of much of the supplemental Kingdom Come color art, including the DC promotional poster (sans type), the DC retail poster, art for the six new trading cards from the Fleer/Skybox set, the artwork for the DC wraparound T-shirt, and an advance look at the forthcoming prose edition of Kingdom Come written by Eliott S. Maggin.
- "Evolution" details the development of a page of Kingdom Come from script to the finished page.
- "Curtain Call" contains photos of some of the models used by Ross in the production of Kingdom Come, including the models for Superman, Batman, Wonder Woman, and Captain Marvel.

Revelations, the companion volume to Kingdom Come in Graphitti's slipcased set, contains Alex Ross' preliminary sketches and other material.*

Waid said, "There's still quite a bit about Kingdom Come's development that no one knows other than myself and Alex. It's so much fun to share that behind-the-scenes information that I'm eternally indebted to Graphitti Designs and DC for giving me the chance to do so. Make your way through Revelations and you'll see many scenes in a new light — you'll read an inadvertent prophecy I made about the future of Marvel Comics — and you'll learn about how Alex actually tried to have me killed over a monkey."

Rounding out Revelations is a five-page two-sided foldout: "Generations: A Kingdom Come Genealogy." Measuring more than 30" wide, "Generations" explores the lineage of more than 200 DC characters in several ways, including traditional blood relations where, via marriage (or other means of creative coupling), two people produce an offspring. There are also lines that trace where a character evolves over time and changes his name (for example, Robin to Nightwing to Red Robin).

Chapman added, "And as can only happen in the continuity of comics, we have the same name either being passed down or utilized by another in DC continuity. Again, we'll use Robin as an example: Robin (Dick Grayson) to Robin II (Jason Todd) to Robin III (Tim Drake) to Robin IV (?). There are also other character connections that will be conveyed in this ultimate blueprint to the DC universe.

"The family tree began as almost an afterthought. While in New York at the DC offices meeting with [DC Vice President of Sales and Marketing] Bruce Bristow and [DC Collected Edition Editor] Bob Kahan about the Kingdom Come book, we were kicking around ideas of what we could add that would be an appropriate addition to the deluxe package. During the course of the discussion, I brought up the idea of a family tree (not really knowing if it was actually doable). The concept was met with considerable enthusiasm and was agreed upon by all in attendance. On my flight home, I was preoccupied with roughing out some basic ideas for a family tree and wondering what I had gotten myself into.

"Once back in the office and upon talking with Alex, I realized that the DC genealogy was a gigantic can of worms but was technically achievable. With the raw core information provided by Alex, along with my copies of the various editions of DC's Who's Who and considerable blind enthusiasm, I set out to do the first reality check on this monster — and what I discovered was very exciting. The family tree could be done. Once this was discovered, an unstoppable momentum began. Many phone calls were made to Alex, whose knowledge of DC characters is mindboggling, or so I thought, until I starting soliciting help from Mark Waid, James Robinson, and Robert Greenberger. Between those four guys, there was a knowledge of DC that even now makes me wake up at night in a cold sweat.

"With the help of these talented people, we achieved the impossible: We created, for the first time ever, a credible DC genealogy. With all of this information at hand, the trick was how to organize the data into a useable form.

"Once some organizational conventions were created, this was more like a puzzle than anything else. Our goal, from the very beginning, was to create as comprehensive a family tree as possible that pertained to the characters appearing in Kingdom Come. We knew that this could not be the all-encompassing DC family tree and thus set our sights on a genealogy of achievable scope. Our goal was also to be as correct and as in-sync as possible with the sometimes inconsistent DC continuity.

"Towards the end, we ran into a number of those cans of worms that made our lives very interesting, to say the least. One was the result of an oversight that was pointed out to us by Mark. We forgot to include Iris West, Barry Allen's bride, but if we included Iris, we had to include their kids, grandkids, pets, and so on. You'll be able to see the repercussions of the inclusion of Iris (I think it added a total of seven new characters to the tree). When all was said and done, we ended up with the DC genealogy that I believed was possible at the very beginning. We are very proud of what we accomplished here and know that DC fans will enjoy seeing this information in this visual fashion. Many people contributed to the sorting-out process needed for the more than 60 years of DC history that provided the foundation for this tree. We thank all of those whose help made this possible."

Chapman said that Revelations has a "unique flexible hardcover binding that can best be explained as having all of the features of a traditional hardcover, with one exception. The chipboard that the cover material is wrapped around is not as thick and, though still protective, has a flexible nature to it. The best examples of this type of binding can often be seen on religious books, missals, and/or hymnals. To take the religious theme one step further, the corners of Revelations have been rounded and as with the Kingdom Come book included in the set, the pages have been edged in gold. The black foil-stamped cover features an inset full-color illustration of Superman created by Ross for this edition."

Ross said, "This will be the finest presentation of my work that I have ever achieved. This collection was a true labor of love and is one of the proudest accomplishments of my career. We've been allowed an opportunity to put down for the record all of the extra story concepts behind each character design from the series and expand upon those which everyone thought they already knew everything about!

"This is a horribly vain package and a triumph of excess; everyone who gets one will love it."

Both Kingdom Come and Revelations are packaged in a red slipcase and the entire package has a suggested retail price of $89.95.

The 12 new story pages are also included in DC's hardcover and trade paperback editions of Kingdom Come. The 232-page DC editions collect all four issues of Kingdom Come and include an introduction by Elliot S. Maggin; Apocrypha, a Kingdom Come supplement that includes the character sketches and descriptions for the six primary characters; a cover legend that names and locates the characters from the covers of the first three issues; and a mini-Kingdom Come art gallery featuring Kingdom Come art created for use outside of the four-issue series.

The suggested retail price for the hardcover is $29.95. The Kingdom Come trade paperback contains all of the material included in the hardcover with a new wrap-around cover by Ross and has a suggested retail price of $14.95.

Chapman said, "We are honored to have been give the opportunity to work with Mark and Alex to create the deluxe package for the Kingdom Come material. This is our 15th anniversary present from DC. Over the last decade, DC has allowed us to to produce hardcover limited editions of some of the best comics it has to offer. Having previously produced deluxe editions of Frank Miller's Dark Knight Returns and Alan Moore and Dave Gibbon's Watchmen, it was our hope that we could add Kingdom Come to the list of DC classics. With all of these books, our objective has been to work closely with the creative talents to create the best possible package. If the design and feel of the package can be an extension of the content inside, we've achieved our objective. Who better to guide us but the individuals who have invested so much of their time and creative juices into the project. The end results speak for themselves. Thank you, Mark, Alex, and DC Comics, for giving us the opportunity to produce this collection."

"There's still quite a bit about Kingdom Come's development that no one knows other than myself and Alex."
— Mark Waid

OLIVER & DINAH QUEEN

JLA'er Green Arrow (currently thought dead) is finally reunited with his former romantic partner, Black Canary, in classic Robin Hood/Maid Marian tradition. Both are retired from superheroics but aid Batman as two of his closest friends. Oliver's baldness is symptomatic of the all too human, thin-haired state of the older crimefighters on Batman's side. Dinah's dark hair and white clothing is intended to be in contrast to her previous black-leather-clad, blond wig-wearing identity which has been handed down to their daughter, the new Black Canary.

Doing a newspaper strip is a lot of work. Many folks who've done it for any length of time have found it necessary to employ one or more assistants.

"If you pick up a Doonesbury original, it could well be that Trudeau's hands never touched that piece of paper."
— Mark Evanier

Not everyone, of course. Sometimes, a strip is not lucrative enough for its creator to afford an extra hand. Other times, the creator simply wants it all to be his work. Bill Watterson and Charles Schulz would be the two most notable examples of the latter. Reportedly, no hand but Watterson's ever touched Calvin and Hobbes. Likewise, no hand but Schulz's has ever touched the Peanuts newspaper strip or ever will. When "Sparky" Schulz retires or leaves us, the round-headed kid and his friends will either leave the newspaper or go reprint.

Watterson is said to have been offended at the whole notion of anyone so much as inking a background line on his strip; he wouldn't even use a colorist for the Sunday page. It has been suggested that, had he employed someone to help with things like lettering and inking backgrounds, he might not have had to take all those sabbaticals, might not have reached, so soon, a decision to discontinue his feature.

Perhaps. But more likely is that the way Watterson thought and the way he worked allowed no room for outsiders; he simply had to do it all in order for his muse to function. Artists are all a little different from one another and they must be allowed to work in the way that is best for them.

(And let's underscore that in highlighter yellow. That's the moral of this whole column: Artists are all a little different from one another and they must be allowed to work in the way that is best for them. If you already know that, skip to the next article.)

Schulz is another who feels he has to do it alone, though, in his case, it seems more a matter of simple personal pride. Whatever, Schulz is nearing half a century of doing it alone, and that is incredible.

Few other artists in strip history have been fast enough to make do without assistants who have worked on the strip itself, at least for extended periods. Frank Robbins, in the decades when he did Johnny Hazard, is said to have handled the writing and art for six dailies and a Sunday page, not only alone but in three days a week. By contrast, Milton Caniff, writing and drawing a strip of similar style and complexity, usually had at least one art assistant on the payroll, plus a letterer — and still worked six- and seven-day weeks, often to all hours. And Caniff was by no means slow.

The Caniff situation is, by far, the more prevalent, even today, when newspaper strips are smaller and simpler than they once were. The deadline must be met every day, in sickness and in health, holidays included, and it can be a killer. In the last few years, a few strips and syndicates have introduced the concept of the sabbatical — an occasional week or three of reruns to allow the cartoonist to take a vacation. But not every syndicate allows for such respites, and some cartoonists consider it a more serious abdication of responsibility than hiring someone to help with inking.

(Newspaper editors, of course, loathe the whole concept of publishing reprints. They have to do a whole new newspaper every day, 365 days a year, including Christmas, and don't enjoy the luxury of repeats. They can't even backlog their front pages, the way a cartoonist can stockpile a strip.)

There are those who criticize the use of assistants, usually on the grounds that someone is getting credit for someone else's work. Another viewpoint, held by a few, is that a comic strip is or should be an individual effort, that the purity of the form is violated by teamwork.

I have no interest in that debate, but those who do would be wise to keep a few points in mind. One is what I was just saying — that a daily and Sunday newspaper strip is a lot of work. Often, it is not a matter of wanting to use assistants; it's a physical necessity.

Another point is that not all assisting is done to the same extreme. There are strip artists who only get help with the lettering or with inking backgrounds. Then there are those who turn the whole thing over to others. The cartoonist does the strip only until it becomes lucrative enough to allow for employees. Then he spends his time in a hammock, taking bows and collecting large denominations for the strip, while tossing a few nickels to the kid who really writes and draws it. Bud Fisher reportedly did this with Mutt and Jeff. Ham Fisher — no relation, except in laziness — supposedly did this, whenever possible, with Joe Palooka.

It should also be noted that employing assistants is a time-honored tradition in the strip world, dating back to the funnies' earliest days, practiced by most strip artists, including most of the acknowledged "greats."

Though he did the bulk of the work himself, Walt Kelly employed several folks, including George Ward, Henry Shikuma, and Don Morgan to help out on Pogo. Al Capp had a number of people to assist on Li'l Abner. Harvey Curtis and Andy Amato were with him for decades, while others — including Bob Lubbers, Stan Drake, Lee Elias, Moe Leff, Mell Lazarus, and some kid named Frazetta — came and went. Alex Raymond had uncredited help on Flash Gordon, Secret Agent X-9, and Rip Kirby — sometimes on the art, almost always on the writing.

Dick Tracy was not a one-man operation for Chester Gould, nor was Hal Foster unwilling to get an assist on Prince Valiant now and then. Chic Young had assistants on Blondie and — well, the list goes on. The point is that great comic strips that haven't employed assistants are the rare exceptions. (Roger Armstrong, who assisted on many a strip, claims that he was, at one point, one of eight folks who made Ella Cinders happen. There are comic strips in the world that aren't even read by eight people.)

And I just thought of one more point: Assistants frequently wind up continuing the creator's tradition. Billy DeBeck hired Fred Lasswell to assist on Barney Google, back when Snuffy Smith was just a supporting character. Eventually, Lasswell took over from DeBeck — as did Smith from Google. Bud Sagendorf assisted Elzie Segar for years on Popeye (née Thimble Theater) and eventually took charge of the spinach-eater.

One might argue — and some do — that a strip should not be continued after its creator's death. This is another argument that doesn't interest me, except to say that economic realities — and some measure of public demand — will always insist that popular characters continue after their creators' demise.

Whether we like it or not, that's the way it is. And when a strip is continued after its originator's passing, there's something nice about it being placed in the custody of someone who was selected, trained, and "broken in" by the originator.

What I do find interesting about assistants is that they're all employed in different ways. Some write, some pencil, some ink, some letter, some color, and some do any combination of these things, changing from day to day.

The way Caniff worked, at least in his later days, was that he would write Steve Canyon, dictating the script over the phone to Shel Dorf. Shel would inscribe the lettering on blank art paper, then write the "stage directions" in pencil in the margins. He would then ship it off to the assistant (Dick Rockwell, for the longest time) who would pencil the strip and sometimes do some minor inking. Then the art would go to Caniff, who would re-pencil where he felt necessary and then ink. If and when Rockwell was busy, Caniff would do it all himself.

Garry Trudeau, on the other hand, writes and draws Doonesbury on plain paper, then faxes it to his syndicate office. An artist named Don Carlton takes the fax and traces it onto the final art board, lettering and inking it all. If you pick up a Doonesbury original, it could well be that Trudeau's hands never touched that piece of paper.

(A quick discussion topic for original art dealers: Are these really Trudeau originals? If Carlton traced the same fax twice, would he have created two Trudeau originals? Hmm.)

There's another artist (who might prefer I not mention his name) who used to employ on his adventure strip an assistant who would pencil the whole thing. Then it would be returned to the artist of record, and he would erase anywhere from 60% to 100% of what the assistant had pencilled, redraw it all, and ink. He often erased every line his assistant had sketched, but this did not mean the assistant was incompetent. "I need him to pencil it first," the main artist told me. "I simply cannot stare at blank paper and start. I can redraw but I cannot draw from scratch."

If there's such a thing as a "typical" creator-assistant relationship, it was typified when the late Russ Manning employed my pal Mike Royer to assist on the Tarzan strip. Russ was a brilliant talent, but he was not the fastest artist in the world; he often needed help to get the work out. (And it was especially bad during the fire season in his area. Russ was an officer of the local Volunteer Fire Department. When that bell rang, he dropped his brush, grabbed an ax, and ran. Russ was

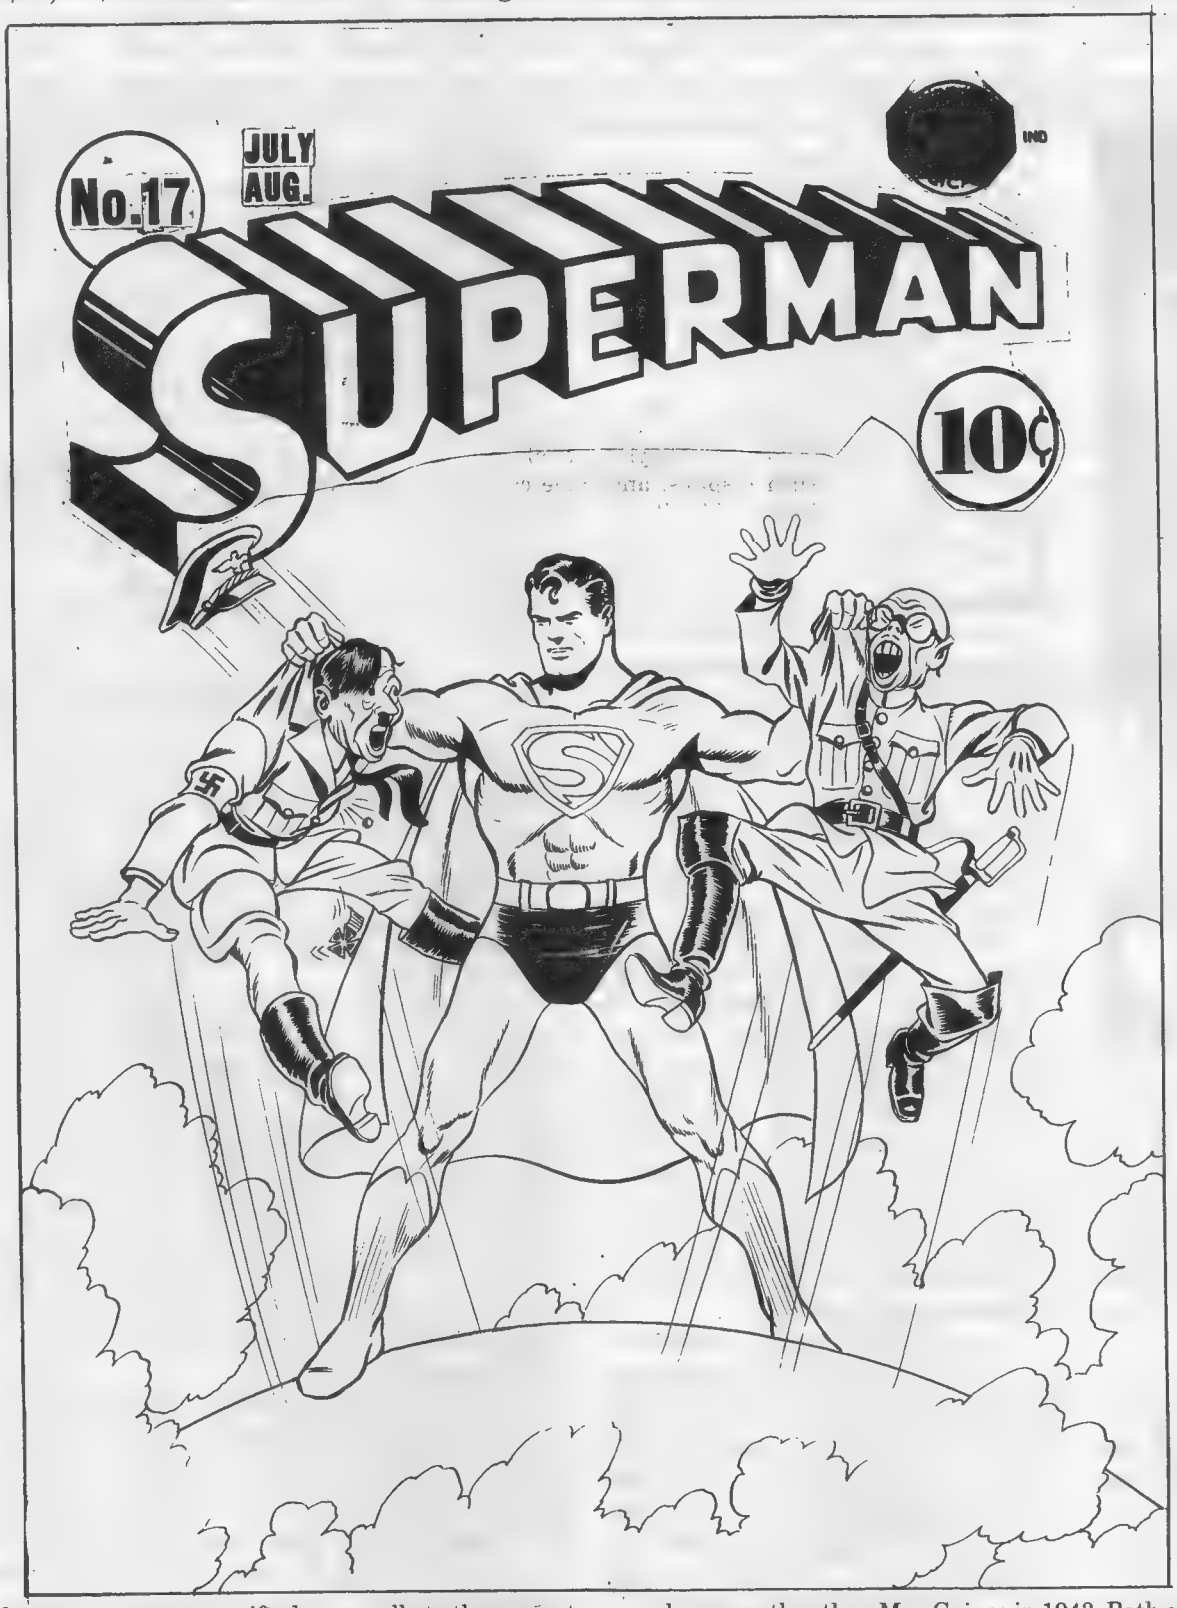
SOTHERBY'S TO AUCTION EARLIEST BATMAN AND SUPERMAN COVERS DISCOVERED TO DATE!!!!

JOIN SOTHERBY'S AND WITNESS HISTORY IN THE MAKING!

Sotheby's is pleased to announce that on June 14, 1997 the original artwork for the covers to BATMAN No. 12 (catalogue estimate $15,000 to $25,000) and SUPERMAN No. 17 (catalogue estimate $20,000 to $40,000) will be brought to public auction.



Previously not known to exist, these two covers were gifted personally to the present owners by none other than Max Gaines in 1943. Both covers were immediately framed, and kept out of the light for over fifty years. While research is not yet at the time of this ad confirmed, the SUPERMAN cover most likely would have pencils by Joe Shuster, and the BATMAN cover pencils by Bob Kane. The original logo lettering, numbering and dates are intact, and as a special surprise the lower ¼ of the cover of BATMAN No. 12 has unpublished artwork that will be cleaned in time for the catalogue illustrations and auction preview.

If you live in the western states and cannot make the New York preview come to our Los Angeles preview June 4, 5, and 6th (for details call the LA office at (310) 274-0340) or come to the New York preview (note this year for three days only!) on June 11, 12, and 13th - Wednesday, Thursday and Friday before the Saturday auction.

Harris Comics

Harris' Vampirella Silver Anniversary Collection, representing episodes from the Warren magazine, concludes with issue #4, scheduled to ship in May.

As with past issues in the series, Jim Silkie and Mark Beachum each contribute variant covers, with Beachum's work gracing a "Bad Girl Edition" and Silkie's art appearing on the "Good Girl Edition."

London Night

A prehistoric Atlantean elf princess is the heroine of London Night Studios' Jurassic Jane, scheduled to begin in May. The series by Sky Owens follows the adventures of Princess Tira, as she attempts to unite the tribe of Pangea and stay a step ahead of the local dinosaurs.

The black-and-white title is priced at $3 and is not recommended for children.

A nude-cover edition is available for $6.

Northstar

Northstar is scheduled to relaunch its line this month with the 40-page Northstar Presents: James O'Barr. O'Barr's art will also be represented by a Zeitgeist III T-shirt and a Zeitgeist poster, also scheduled to ship in March.

Northstar spokesperson Eric Field said, "All of these items will give fans a peek into a darker, more demented side of the great Crow creator."

Re-Visionary

Re-Visionary's Triple-X Cinema: A Cartoon History continues with the scheduled May release of issue #2, covering the years 1975 through 1984 and focusing on the career of Marilyn Chambers.

The making of such adult movies as Café Flesh and Taboo is also featured. Kevin Breyfogle, Daerick Gross, and Brad Foster provide art for the 32-page, black-and-white issue. The title is priced at $3.50.

Rip Off Press Inc.

Demi the Demoness, currently appearing in a regular comic strip in Oui Magazine, is scheduled to cross over with three comics titles in 1997.

Demi creator Steven Crompton is collaborating with Ron Fontes on a Demi appearance in Fontes' Captain Fortune.

The storyline involves a rift in the space-time continuum which deposits Demi aboard the space freighter Kurosawa.

Fontes said, "Steve's inks on my pencils are a perfect complement." The issue is planned for release later this year.

Also in the works, but with no release dates set, are Demi appearances in Phil Longmeier's hermaphrodite fantasy series Tales of Shaundra and in a 30-page Cassiopeia the Witch minicomic.

Demon Baby is assailed on two fronts when the murderer of her father and a vengeance-seeking demon both plot her destruction in Demon Baby #2, scheduled to ship in April. The quarterly black-and-white title is by Rich Larson and features covers by Larson and Steve Fastner. It is 32 pages for $2.95. A signed-and-numbered edition, limited to 500 copies is available for $9.95.

Verotik

•Arthur Suydam will be the next artist to take on Frank Frazetta's Death Dealer character. Suydam will take over art on the Death Dealer series beginnning with issue #4, scheduled to ship in July.

Suydam said, "I've always considered Frank Frazetta to be my unofficial art instructor. Now it's an honor for me to be collaborating with him."

Verotik CEO Glenn Danzig said, "I've been a fan of Arthur's since his early days on DC's horror titles and his current work is simply outstanding. This will be a very Frazetta Death Dealer, and I'm sure fans will be in awe of Arther's magnificent rendering of the Death Dealer."

Point of View

very devoted to meeting his deadlines, but he was even more devoted to saving his neighbors' homes.)

The way Russ and Mike worked varied from week to week, strip to strip. Russ wrote and usually pencilled. Mike usually inked. But sometimes, Mike pencilled and Russ inked: It depended on the schedule but also on the storyline.

For instance, if a week of strips had Tarzan boogeying around the usual jungle, Mike could easily handle all the backgrounds. Russ had established the "look" of the jungle, and Mike could simulate Manning-style foliage. But if the continuity took Lord Greystoke to a strange, new land, Russ usually had to do the backgrounds. Often, he would finish the first few as a model, then leave the rest for Mike.

Mike is a better letterer than Russ, but, as Russ worked through his phase of the work, it was sometimes more convenient for him to letter right then — so he did. If the subject matter played to Mike's strengths, he might rough pencil some figures for Royer to finish.

They worked together — often in the same room — and discovered for themselves the best way to collaborate, with Russ (of course) having the final say. The result was that, by the time a Tarzan strip reached the papers, neither Manning nor Royer could tell which of them had done what.

Now, obviously, if a Russ Manning needs an assistant to help him draw a strip, this is the way to do it: Let Russ decide how best to use the assistant. The final responsibility for the work still rested with Manning.

Can you imagine how ridiculous it would have been for the newspaper syndicate to intervene in this creative relationship? Wouldn't it have been absurd for an editor at the syndicate office to intrude and demand, "No, no, Russ! You do all the art in pencil, then have Mike letter and ink. Keep Royer away from the pencilling and don't you look at the inked work before it's printed"? Wouldn't that have been moronic?

Well, folks: That's how we do it in the comic-book business.

Yes, all this time, I've been sneaking up on a major point. If this had been a DC- or Marvel-published Tarzan comic book, instead of the Tarzan newspaper strip, the whole nature of their collaboration would have been different. For one thing, the two men might never have met or spoken.

Russ would have been hired to pencil it all — and, if he cared at all how the finished work looked, he'd have had to pencil it very precisely, because he would have had no contact with his inker. On the newspaper strip, Russ could pencil some things loosely because he might ink certain things himself — or he had learned that Mike, as inker, could handle certain things to his satisfaction. And, of course, Russ had the final approval of the work and could retouch something if he didn't like what Mike had done with it.

But, if Russ were the penciller (only) and Mike were the inker (only), Russ would likely not touch the art before printing. He might or might not learn Mike's strengths and be able to pencil with them in mind. Mike would be on his own to learn how best to render Russ Manning art. There is a difference between two artists working together on the same project and two strangers who play tag-team with the pages via an intermediary.

And on many projects at many comic-book companies, inkers are frequently rotated. To achieve his vision on the printed page, Russ would have had to wind up pencilling as tightly as possible, drawing in every leaf on every tree, hoping that Mike would understand what he wanted, praying that the editor wouldn't hand this issue to some new kid, less talented than Royer and schooled in a different style.

Does this make sense to you? It doesn't make sense to me. As I keep saying, artists are all different. Why then, do so many in the comic-book industry strive to have every team of artists collaborate in precisely the same way?

There are reasons for this — lousy reasons, perhaps, but reasons. In our next installment, we'll be discussing how things will (and should) change. And maybe the column after, we'll also talk about how technical advances in our business will further destroy the old divisions of labor on a comic book. The day of the rigidly separated writer-penciller-letterer-inker-colorist teams is ending, and I, for one, couldn't be happier.

Next week, I'll tell you why.

The address is Mark Evanier, 363 S. Fairfax Ave., #303, Los Angeles, CA 90036. You can also reach him at evanier@ix.netcom.com, unless you're on America Online, in which case you can't even get on-line with all the danged busy signals.

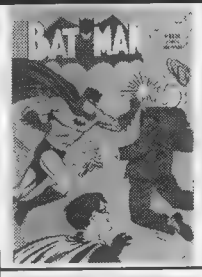
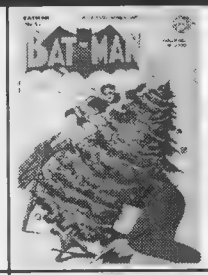
GOLDEN AGE COMIC BOOKS

LOT 1 - NEW BOOK OF COMICS #2
Pre-hero platinum age comic. Prototype Superman character Dr Occult. Unrestored and flat with very nice color and eye appeal. Some wear at spine. Hard to find in any condition. Good Plus
Minimum Bid $1,200

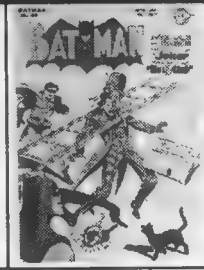
LOT 2 - ALL FLASH #13
Beautiful example of E.E. Hibbard's fluid lines in this exceptionally nice book. Colors are dynamic and the book is flat and tight and ever so slight spine roll and some slight wear on spine keep this book from the highest grades, but it is very nice copy. Fine/Very Fine Minimum Bid $150



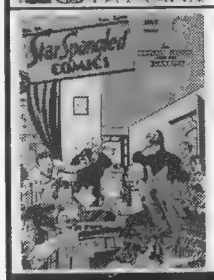
LOT 3 - BATMAN #28
This is not a classic cover or a key story, but it is a damn fine book in extremely nice condition. Colors are brilliant and the book is tight. A spine roll and a light arrival pencil date keep the grade down to Fine plus. Minimum Bid ..$300



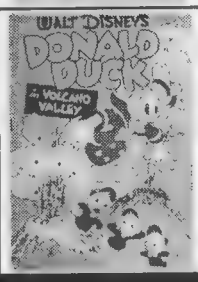
LOT 4 - BATMAN #33
Great Christmas cover and an actually cool Penguin story makes this a neat book. It has a dust shadow on the right hand edge which is slightly brittle. Upper staple is rusted. Overall grade Very Good.
Minimum Bid $125



LOT 5 - BATMAN #40
Why do people write on comic books?! This classic Joker cover served as a notebook for someone Pen writing on side is in ink, but is light and could be cleaned. Cover is tight, colors good and spine show just a little wear Needs a good home and some cleaning to be great book. Very Good
Minimum Bid $150



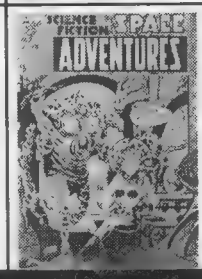
LOT 6 - STAR SPANGLED COMICS #34
Simon and Kirby at their best. Book has a few problems at the spine and the single staple has worn through detaching the otherwise nice cover from the book. I want to say VG, but grade is only Good.
Minimum Bid $40



LOT 7 - DONALD DUCK FOUR COLOR #147
Classic Carl Barks book with fabulous cover art. One of the few books that, I think, still hasn't been reprinted In incredible shape flat and tight with solid colors and sharp corners. Back cover has a small wrinkle near spine does not affect front cover. Very Fine Minimum Bid $400

LOT 8 - RED RYDER WELLS LAMONT GIVEAWAY
Wells Lamont used to make the Red Ryder gloves and mittens. This giveaway is difficult to find in any grade, but this book is a true near mint. Perfect in every way just the slightest of color change at edge keeps it from mint. Beautiful book, NEAR MINT
Minimum Bid $125

LOT 9 - MARGE'S LITTLE LULU #1
This character gets more and more collectible as time goes on. I recommended this book as one that will increase in value for years This is a particularly great copy sharp and clean in every way. Some slight spine wear forces me to downgrade it to Fine/Very Fine
Minimum Bid $150

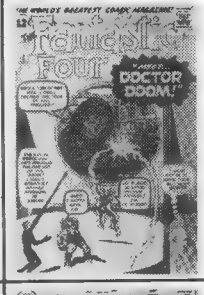


LOT 10 - SCIENCE FICTION SPACE ADVENTURES #12
Considered a classic Ditko cover, I think this book deserves a place with the Golden Age books. Good copy with some aging on inside front cover and rounded edges. Cover is unimpaired but has one slight scrape and one slight pencil mark. Overall grade Fine.
Minimum Bid $100

SILVER AGE COMIC BOOKS

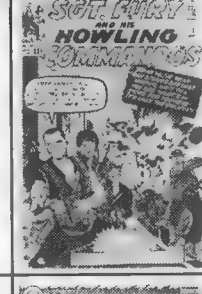
LOT 11 - JOURNEY INTO MYSTERY #83
Starting off this section of First Appearance books is a great guy in fact many know him as a God in this industry: The mighty Thor: Dr Blake stand up and take a bow. Okay copy has some dirt along the spine, a little Marvel chipping and Gary Hancock wrote his name on the upper middle of the cover. Gary you schmuck! No No - just kidding Overall grade Very Good.
Minimum Bid $300

LOT 12 - AVENGERS #1
Thor, Hulk, Ironman in gold armor, Wasp and my brother-in-law the Antman team up to defeat Loki. Appealing copy with corner piece out of bottom right BACK cover. Crease along right top corner Very Good Plus.
Minimum Bid $320

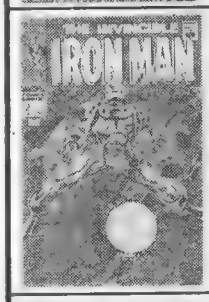


LOT 13 - FANTASTIC FOUR #5
First appearance of the original Doctor Kevorkian: Doctor Victor Von Doom - did he get kidded in grade school with a name like that or what. The quintessential Marvel villain and technically Sue Storm in bondage. Beautiful white pages, sharp edges, flat cover with the heartbreak of color loss and an insignificant pen mark at the top. Very Fine.
Minimum Bid $400

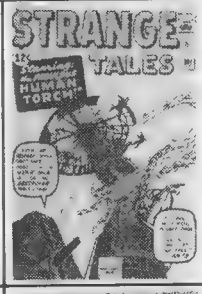
LOT 14 - DAREDEVIL #1
The most unusual Hero of all: Matt Murdock First appearance of Daredevil. Death of Battling Murdock Great colors, flat copy with slightly rounded corners and wear at the top. Fine PLUS.
Minimum Bid $300



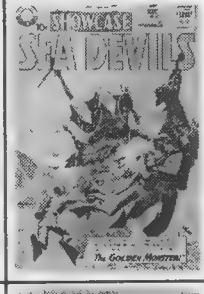
LOT 15 - SGT. FURY AND HIS HOWLING COMMANDOS #1
Notice that is only the front cover of Sgt Fury's first appearance and he already has ripped his shirt and pants This guy is hell on the quartermaster corps. Great Kirby art and one of the most underrated early Marvels. Flat book with some color flaking and multiple stress lines Very good. Minimum Bid $100



LOT 16 - THE INVINCIBLE IRONMAN #1
Okay, technically not a first appearance but still a number one. Origin of Ironman one of Marvel's longest running heroes. Clean straight copy with slight wear at edges. Fine PLUS Minimum Bid $80



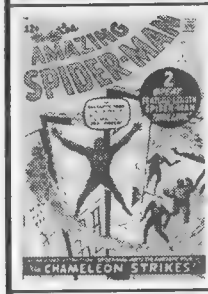
LOT 17 - STRANGE TALES #101
OKAY, not a first appearance or a number one, but still the first in a series Human Torch begins, has recap of Fantastic Four origins. Kirby art throughout. Staple stress and stress lines along spine otherwise nice copy. Fine MINUS Minimum Bid $150



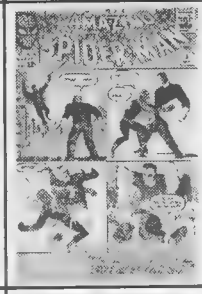
LOT 18 - SHOWCASE #27
First appearance (are you happy now - good) of Sea Devils the lamest super heroes...now wait, they had cool painted covers by Russ Heath. Brilliant cover colors, inked arrival date on left below title 3/4" crease lower right corner. Fine MINUS
Minimum Bid $110

LOT 19 - HOUSE OF SECRETS #92
This book is almost impossible to find in high grade and it is one of the greatest collaborations between artists in comics. Where else do you get Bernie Wrightson, Mike Kaluta, Jeff Jones, Alan Weiss and Len Wein on one story. Very nice copy with some minor creases on the lower right hand edge. Fine/Very Fine Minimum Bid $200

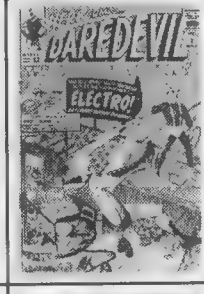
LOT 20 - GREEN LANTERN #1
First appearance of the Guardians of the Galaxy - aha! Gil Kane classic cover and art retells origin. Good issue to have for any collection including stamps and coins. Has color loss GOOD.
Minimum Bid . $200



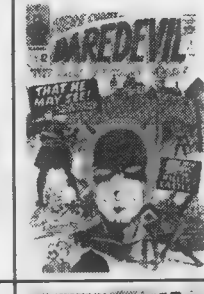
LOT 21 - AMAZING SPIDER-MAN #1
"Nuff said" marvel chipping on right edge Glue spot, officially known as "Schumutz", in upper left corner of otherwise nicer copy Very Good.
Minimum Bid $900



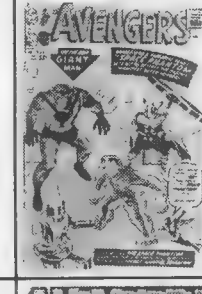
LOT 22 - AMAZING SPIDER-MAN #4
First appearance of Sandman, one of Spidey's greatest enemies Nice copy, sharp corners, slight wear along spine and bottom FINE.
Minimum Bid $300



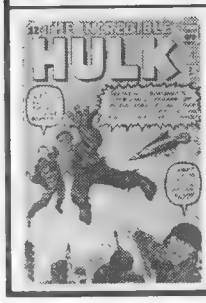
LOT 23 - DAREDEVIL #2
Daredevil gets his ass kicked by Electro Second appearance of Electro with a Fantastic Four cameo Complete copy with no missing pieces or tears. Good
Minimum Bid $35



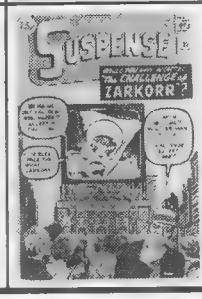
LOT 24 - DAREDEVIL #9
Daredevil in the Killer castle. Great copy with only the slightest wear Near Mint
Minimum Bid . $90



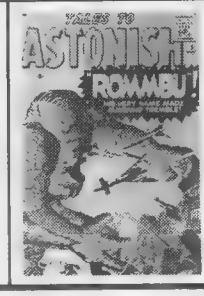
LOT 25 - AVENGERS #2
The space phantom vs the Avengers, The Hulk leaves Small spine roll and faded pencil writing on cover Very Good MINUS
Minimum Bid $60



LOT 26 - THE INCREDIBLE HULK #3
Hulk dresses up in a frilly smock and goes shopping Sorry just seeing if you are paying attention. Origin retold. First appearance of the Ringmaster. Heavy soiling and one inch split spine, lower staple detached from cover. Complete copy. Good MINUS.
Minimum Bid $60

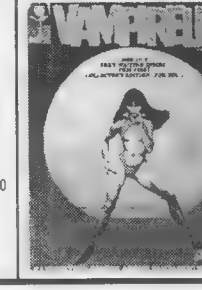


LOT 27 - TALES OF SUSPENSE #35
Prototype issue of the Watcher (Big deal). Cool cover reminds of the big screen at Times Square that David Letterman uses to...never mind Beautiful copy Very Fine
Minimum Bid $50



LOT 28 - TALES TO ASTONISH #19
To be honest I wasn't astonished by these tales as much as I was intrigued. Rommbu looks like something that came out of my septic tank when it backed up Very clean and bright copy with slight crease in lower left hand corner and time date near title. Fine Minimum Bid $40

LOT 29 - MYSTERIES OF UNEXPLORED WORLDS #11
Neat old Charlton comic when they were trying to compete with the big boys. Some spine wear and slight pen mark on top. FINE Minimum Bid $30



LOT 30 - VAMPIRELLA #1
I didn't want to sell this, but I've got an extra space She is the original bad girl and could take all those other females apart! Classic Frazetta cover, very nice shape with small lower right hand corner crease and slight stress lines on spine. Fine PLUS Minimum Bid One thousand dollars NO! The IRS is forcing me to adjust opening bid to $120

Hammering his way to the top

An interview with James Owen

By Jim Owens

With a run of 13 issues of Starchild, three different collected editions of that first story arc ("Awakenings"), and the just-completed Starchild: Crossroads miniseries, as well as a cross-country studio relocation for health reasons (which forced him to put some plans on hiatus), James A. Owen has now scheduled a number of projects for the remainder of this year and beyond. I spoke with Owen recently to find out just what's next for him.

As James and I start all conversations, we discussed how Mom was doing. It's been a long-running gag between us, since we have such similar names and both work in the relatively small field of comics.

As James said, "Let it be known for now and throughout all eternity, there are two of us. There's a Jim Owens, with the 's'at the end of the last name, working for Comics Buyer's Guide. And there is a James Owen, with the 's' at the end of the first name, creator of the Starchild saga."

When asked if it bothered him having two people with such similar names working in the same industry, James said, "I'd worried about that quite a bit, actually, when your name first started popping up. Especially the first time I got your messages at a hotel.

"It was during one of the trade shows, and somebody frantically had to get some sort of message to me, and it all came out as gibberish. I suggested they check a different hotel, and they said, 'Aren't you Jim Owens?' and I said, 'Well, James Owen,' and they said, 'Yeah,' and I said, 'No!' "

"... doing a novel first — Well, it's kind of like learning how to do brain surgery with a rock."
— James Owen

In our May 1, 1987 issue, we ran a preview of James Owen's Pryderi Terra #2.

While some of Owen's more die-hard fans might be aware of his years of work in the comics field, not many know that, before the first issue of Starchild was published, Owen had presented the story in a magazine-format comic book called Pryderi Terra.

He said, "I knew very little about how the comics market worked. I used office equipment at my mother's business to produce the material to publish the first issue. When I sent it to be printed, I hadn't even solicited it, since I didn't know the guidelines for doing that. So I ordered an amount that I thought I could sell at the San Diego Comic-Con.

"Everything looked great from the printer, until we noticed that it had neglected to put the retail price on the issue. We spent the entire day before the show trying to get enough price tags in place for us to sell them the next day."

For those lucky few who obtained a copy of Pryderi Terra (and if you didn't, Owen confided that he still had a few copies), it can be noted that even in the beginning he had a style all his own. However, his direction has changed quite a bit since this first Starchild story.

"Awakenings" had such a large list of characters that at times it was like trying to read Our Town from the end, forward.

"Awakenings" tells the tale of Ezekiel Higgins the Weaver, Matthew and Homer his sons, along with Rip Van Winkle, Martin Humble, Thomas the Rhymer, Little Neil, and, of course, Anders. It's the story of the mysterious Mantle, the fate of the Fay, but mostly it is a story of stories. Owen said of his major influences for the basis of his story, "I pull a lot of it from here, there, and everywhere; that's one reason why I don't give a specific time or place to these events. I give towns but I'm not saying this is America or England or Dark Ages Europe or the 15th, 17th, or 18th Century. That would kind of spoil it."

Martin Humble: Is he a baby or is he a changeling? Whatever he is, he makes an appearance in Crossroads*' final issue.*

Owen's newest addition to the Starchild saga is the four-issue Starchild: Crossroads mini-series which is just concluding. Each issue of the series had a different cover artist: Colleen Doran, Dave Sim, Linda Medley, and Charles Vess.

Starchild: Crossroads is a series of short stories that form the prequel to "Awakenings," and Owen said, "They're interconnected short stories. If your first comics project was a 300-page novel, you'd want to do short stories, too.

"I know I'm swiping this from somebody, but the example I use is that, doing a novel first — Well, it's kind of like learning how to do brain surgery with a rock. Then somebody comes along and hands you a scalpel for the first time, and you find yourself going from a novel to a short story.

"Doing the short stories enabled me to relax my storytelling a bit and concentrate on doing a single story while giving more of a back-story to some of the characters. That was something I couldn't really do effectively while in the middle of a novel."

In the first issue, subtitled "The Weaver's Tale," Ezekiel Higgins enters the inn carrying a large bundle and begins a tale of meeting Rip Van Winkle at the side of a road and entering into a contest with the captain of The Flying Dutchman herself, Henryk Hudson.

"We start with Hudson giving the rules of the drinking game to Higgins. It was put to him that the man who couldn't drain his stein would have to bring some fuel for the fire, and you know what they were using for tinder. It was meant to be a little bit ambiguous, because you don't know if he did or didn't. And you're really not sure what's in the bag. Maybe somebody's in the bag or maybe not."

The second Crossroads tale, "The Innkeeper's Tale," gives back-story to "Awakenings." In this issue, the original innkeeper, Martin Keeper, tries to commit suicide. After a number of tries, he has yet to end his own existence. It's during his last attempt that a gentleman, which readers of "Awakenings" will recognize as Harrigan, stops to join him for a drink. One of the most striking characters of this issue goes by the name of Two Penny Jack. His appearance starts with a line uttered by Harrigan — "Where does death come in?" — and is ended by Two Penny Jack himself, "It comes in through the front door, if it is polite. If not, well, it will probably come anyway."

Owen said, "I wanted to get Two Penny Jack in at some point, and his character — obviously with the Faustian plot — was based a lot on 'The Devil and Daniel Webster.' I was trying to come up with a visualization of what my idea of the devil might look like, and the devil as a Puritan really struck my fancy. What better job for the devil on Earth than to be the founder of a religion where everything fun and entertaining is sinful?"

The third of the Crossroads tales, "The Wanderer's Tale," features Rip Van Winkle. In this story, we not only hear the adventures of Van Winkle, but also find out that he and a little fellow by the name of Falafel share a unique relationship. Is there any connection between this little fellow and the popular vegetarian dish?

Owen said, "Cindy, my wife, is a vegetarian most of the time and Paul Chadwick is, as well, and I have several friends who are vegetarians. Falafel is big for vegetarians, as well as making a killer character name."

Crossroads ends its four-issue run with the "The Bard's Tale." Owen described this story as primarily about old Tom, Thomas the Rhymer. The story starts off with three little fairies (the Dickens boys) in London hats and trench coats. They're arguing about a baby they have stolen and whether they stole the baby and left the changeling, or whether they switched them by accident — the problem being that this is the ugliest creature they have ever seen. When asked if this baby is by any chance Martin Humble, Owen said, "None other. It's basically Thomas the Rhymer's story this time. He is the most famous of the mortal lovers of Titania. This is where I work the actual fairy mythology into the Starchild mythology, because the story of Thomas the Rhymer being seduced by the fairy queen is one of the most famous fairy tales. It also helps to tell the tale of how Martin Humble became a fixture at the Two Penny Inn."

With Crossroads' completion, Owen said he is looking toward the collected editions of these four issues. "Crossroads will be collected in three limited editions: trade paperback, hardcover, and connoisseur's edition. I should also mention that I'm in discussion with Neil Gaiman about doing the introduction for Crossroads. The reason I'm talking to Neil specifically is because I've gotten a bit of mail from people who claim that I stole the ideas for Titania and Oberon and Thomas the Rhymer from Sandman. Neil's introduction will be along the lines of, 'No, James and I both stole from a third person — and that was William Shakespeare.'"

As for Owen's plans, he said he's headed for "Image. I'll be doing a 14-part story called Starchild: Mythopolis.

"Image made me an offer I couldn't refuse. I felt that with the status quo in comics and the way that publishing and distribution have shaken down, I needed a bigger hammer to really get back into publishing full time. So, with this in mind, the Image deal made good sense to me. The deal is about as clear-cut a deal as I have ever seen. What it is, is that Image will put an 'i' on the front of my comic book, and I'll give Image two ad pages in the back of the comic book. Image does the solicitation, promotion, printing, and distribution of each issue; takes out a fee and production costs; and sends me a check for the rest of the balance.

"Image doesn't claim anything on copyright or trademark. It doesn't claim to represent my property or me, and I own everything. In fact I'm free to leave Image after any issue that's been solicited. It keeps Coppervale alive and it gives me a bigger hammer over my shoulder to deal with any distributor problems.

"Starchild: Mythopolis begins in July and will be published on a bimonthly schedule. The story begins right after 'Awakenings.' It's about Anders and Sigfreid going into the city."

— James Owen

As readers of the first Starchild adventure will remember, at the gatherum Anders has the Mantle and tells the story that creates the world. "All Anders has ever known is the city and the hamlet where the Two Penny Inn is. So Starchild: Mythopolis starts with Anders and Sigfreid on a pilgrimage to the city Brigadoon. Brigadoon is a world city. The entire world is one city, except for little patches of forest between the boroughs, with roads that connect them and inns like the Two Penny Inn, where you tell stories for your room and board.

"Everything else is city; it's always been that way and it's always going to be that way, at least for the next century (when the next gatherum takes place). Anders and Sigfreid are going to explore what Anders has created."

Will Mythopolis visit the next century or will that be part of future story arcs? "We're only going to be dealing with probably the year immediately after. As far as I'm concerned, this is how things are going to be for a while."

Will the Two Penny Inn and Harrigan's Green still exist? Owen said, "Yes, everything in Starchild: Crossroads is gospel now, because the gatherum changed everything forward and backward. Things in Crossroads may not necessarily mesh with what was in 'Awakenings,' because the gatherum changed it all."

When asked if all of the players from "Awakenings" would return, Owen said, "Some of them will; there's some that disappeared that will be coming back. For example, Anders never did find his father, Homer. To play off this, in the city there's going to be a story that parents tell their children to scare them into going to sleep that goes, 'You better be good or the blind man will get you.'

"So there's a lot of stuff I'll be able to play with, but doing it this way, with Brigadoon, all the bets are off, all the rules are broken. I can do whatever I want in this city, because I have now established this isn't American culture or European culture; this is Owen culture. I destroyed everything else that possibly could have existed, so there aren't any more relevant questions about where or when these stories take place."

When Mythopolis is published by Image, Owen said it will still retain the Starchild tradition of color covers and black-and-white interior artwork. However, Owen isn't going to stick strictly to black-and-white work. "We're going to do a once-a-year project called Fool's Hollow," he said. "We'll publish it as Coppervale Press to show that we're not going anywhere. Being done solely by myself, it will be produced in full-painted color and is scheduled for Halloween. There will also be a limited-edition hardcover available of this 48-page prestige format project."

Will he collaborate with other artists on this or any other Starchild projects? Owen said, "I considered collaborations for Fool's Hollow because of the color work but ultimately decided we didn't want to water anything down. I like doing the art and I'm not ambitious enough to want the enterprise to overtake the art side and have a lot of people churning out pages just to churn them out. As far as having guest covers — well, I've gotten that out of my system for the time being.

"There's a big project that we're scheduling for Christmas of 1998 that I'm starting to work on now," Owen continued. "It's going to be collaborations with a lot of people. It's basically going to be the coolest anthology-pin-up book in the history of comics. I'm already working on my Eisner speech."

James Owen has a passion for ginger ale. This goes far beyond the enjoyment of having your favorite refreshment after a hard day's work. Owen is a collector of ginger ale memorabilia and has gone so far as to put the soft drink prominently in his published works. Owen said that his passion has led to much bigger things: "It kind of starts like the Image deal, with wanting to get a bigger hammer. Along with publishing, the other bigger hammer I wanted involved promotions. You go to conventions and you see DC with its 2000 square feet and 50 television screens flashing Superman and Batman at you. It's very difficult for a small company to compete, much less a company whose whole creative force consists of one guy with a lot of other friends.

"The solution to that bigger hammer problem came from Walt Disney. He realized he wasn't going to have enough money to do the things he wanted to do on his own. So he started hitting up companies for corporate sponsorship. He did the same thing for the World's Fair; he built an exhibit for companies and then brought these completed and incredible exhibits back to Disneyland. The company got a beautiful exhibit, Disney got a new attraction, and it was a fair trade all around. Disney's still doing the same thing today; it just refits Space Mountain at Disneyland and now it's Space Mountain, sponsored by Federal Express. It doesn't change Space Mountain any, but Federal Express gets tremendous exposure, and Walt Disney gets an even better theme park ride."

So where does this lead Coppervale Press and the comics industry? Owen said, "My bigger hammer was a company called Vernor's Ginger Ale. My thought was that this is something that has a certain cachet to it that I could make mesh with what I do with Starchild. It wouldn't work with say, Doritos, Taco Bell, or Pepsi. Ginger ale, however, would work really well with the type of comic book I do.

"We're going to be doing a special Fool's Hollow, 16-page comic book that you can only get with a proof of purchase from Vernor's Ginger Ale."

STARCHILD

"I guess my thought was, you look at the larger magazines, say Esquire, GQ, or Vanity Fair, and if a soft drink company wanted to take out an ad in one of those magazines, you're talking $40 to $60 thousand. So if they're operating on such a larger scale than we are: If I came up with a really decent promotion that would cost them a couple hundred thousand dollars and demonstrate to them how it could pay off for them, as well, they wouldn't bat an eyelash.

"What has happened is this: We are going to build the Coppervale Market Place, sponsored by Vernor's Ginger Ale. We're going to distribute 100 thousand ginger ale coupons at all the major conventions this year beginning at Heroes Con in Charlotte, N.C. Then we'll continue this at DragonCon in Atlanta, over to Chicago for both the ABA (American Booksellers Association) and the Chicago Comicon, and end up at Comic Con International: San Diego."

Owen also has other projects planned with his new sponsor. "We're going to be doing a special Fool's Hollow, 16-page comic book that you can only get with a proof of purchase from Vernor's Ginger Ale. So send in a dollar and the proof of purchase and get this 16-page comic book that will not be reprinted for at least a year and will not be available through comics stores. We're also going to do a ginger ale stein with Graphitti Designs, which we're also going to work out as a mail-in proof of purchase with Vernor's. The goal is to just tie everything we can together with Starchild and Vernor's Ginger Ale.

"I've mentioned ginger ale in 'Awakenings' and also in Crossroads #4. Harrigan has even mentioned that the vendor that brings the ginger ale in oak barrels is a fellow named Vernor. Some people may look at this as selling out to commercialism, which I don't think is the issue in this case, because this is something I started in the comic book before the sponsorship idea ever came up. Putting ginger ale in the comic book was a natural thing for me.

"What does Vernor's get out of all this? Well it's like Dark Horse Comics and Apple Jacks. It gets to tie in its name with my name and the comics. It's no different than the coupon or comic strip on the back of Apple Jacks highlighting Dark Horse. This, I think, has even more of a cachet than that: You can't really tie in Star Wars and Apple Jacks, but ginger ale and Starchild will mesh together really well — especially doing things like the ginger ale stein and the other things we can do together."

How far into production is the Coppervale Marketplace? "Well, the figures are nearly finished. We just argued out the whole layout of the exhibit. It's quite a thing to determine: You have to figure out if the thing will be open on both sides and how you want the traffic flow to go. We expect this exhibit to be the thing to see at the conventions this year. I don't think anybody else is going to have anything like it. It's massive; it's going to be a walk-through exhibit occupying 600 square feet of space. It has the look of a set of interconnected cottages, and with its longer-than-wider shape it'll be just like walking into the comic-book.

"On one side, you're going to see old Thomas the Rhymer in his study writing at his desk, life-sized. He'll even occasionally turn and wink at the audience walking past. There will be books flying overhead and shelving themselves. On the other side you're going to see Harrigan and Martin Humble at the Two Penny Inn. In fact we've even licensed the George M. Cohen piece 'Harrigan' to be played. We wanted to have some good background music and that's what we got.

"We are negotiating with Ben Kingsley to do a two-minute monologue for the main part of the display, which is Ezekiel Higgins. Higgins will be standing in front of the storytelling tree under a storm-swept sky, reciting this two-minute monologue that is just going to be the highlight of the exhibit."

James Owen's other plans include International Studio. "International Studio is a 100-year-old arts and society magazine that I bought all of the rights to immediately after I went exclusive with Capital Cityl a little more than a year ago. I had been interested in it for some time. It fell apart during the war years; its younger stepbrother was what is now The Art News."

Owen said he wanted to do this magazine because, "It's something that is not just going to be a Coppervale publication, it's going to be done in partnership with one of the larger magazine companies, of which George is all I can say. Our working model for this publishing relationship was actually Martha Stewart Living.

"The reason I wanted to get into this type of larger magazine was to be able to focus on the things I was interested in. You look at what represents our industry to the mainstream and you're fairly limited. We're stuck wondering why we can't attract a more mature readership to our industry.

"I wondered: What if the industry had a good arts magazine that was mainstreamed and was published on a broad scale, offering national and international distribution? It should contain nice articles on something like a children's book illustrator, for example David Christiana, who is doing the cover for the first issue.

"Then we could follow that with an interview with Paul Chadwick and then a feature on the three generations of Wyeth artists or George Lucas. It would probably attract advertisers like Plymouth, fashion companies, and ginger ale. You know: advertising directed at the kind of people we say we want to bring into this industry.

"I think this project has a lot of promise to it and, since I don't have a lot of experience in this market, I put together an editorial package and went out to find another bigger hammer in the form of a large mainstream publisher. We're making the announcement about the revival of this magazine on its 100th anniversary April 5. The first sample issue will be available in September, and plans right now call for this publication to be printed eight times a year beginning in January 1998."

James Owen works in an industry he loves, for fans who adore him. He's married to the best business partner he could hope to have. And as you've just read, he has more projects on his calendar than most in this industry have had in a lifetime. Best of all he is the best Pretend Big Brother any guy could hope for. Thanks, Mom.

Shannon Wheeler's caffeinated comics create a stir

Adhesive Press INDIES

"This way, people tell me that I'm much better-looking than the character in my comic book ... I was also trying to draw the emotional side of myself when I work."

— Shannon Wheeler, in response to a question about the "big, brooding geek" cartoonist character in his Too Much Coffee Man*.*

By Carol Denbow

By now most readers of alternative comics know Shannon Wheeler's humorous hero Too Much Coffee Man. Each issue is a collection of short, self-contained vignettes examinining the lives and adventures Wheeler's hero, TMCM, as well as other characters in slightly more reality-based stories. In all his stories, Wheeler applies his wit and style to examine the effects of maximum caffeination.

Shannon Wheeler started out doing mini-comics in the San Francisco Bay Area and, in July 1993, published his first full-sized Too Much Coffee Man comic. Since then he has published five regular issues and a color special. Due to be released soon is his book Too Much Coffee Man's Guide for the Perplexed*, a hardcover compilation of all the early TMCM stories which aren't in the regular comic-book series, including one from* Dark Horse Presents*.*

CBG: Aside from the comics themselves, what other Too Much Coffee Man stuff do you have available?

Wheeler: There's the Too Much Coffee Man Full Color Special #1 (now in its sixth printing), several T-shirts, coffee mugs, the Zippo lighter, TV commercial, toilet paper, and a web site.

CBG: What prompted you to do comics?

Wheeler: I was inspired to do comics. When I was in college I read Dark Knight, Watchmen, Love & Rockets and Moonshadow and I thought, wow, comics have a lot of potential. This actually is a valid art form. What do you know?

CBG: Do you want to make a statement with TMCM or is your intent just plain fun?

Wheeler: It is my intent to have fun with my comic book, but I do have subtext. I can express every two-bit peice of philosophy I've thought of in the last six years. Maybe it isn't a valid art form after all. I've won the Eisner for the comic book, The Hatch award for the TV commericial — which also recently won a spanish award, I can't recall the name, for best animated commmercial — and I was nominated for Best Script Site of the year from the People magazine-sponsored Yahoo Award.

CBG: What prompted you to begin by doing mini-comics?

Wheeler: The minis were cheap and easy to do.

CBG: Are there cartoonists who have influenced you?

Wheeler: Gilbert Shelton, Robert Crumb, and Charles Schultz.

CBG: Aside from various one-pagers, the way you have each issue written, there are essentially three major parts: the TMCM adventure, the local cartoonist creating and selling his comics, and the ironic story of the guy and girl trying to find romantic satisfaction. You differentiate them as Parts I, II, and III. Are these meant to be perceived as three pieces of an overall story? In other words, is the TMCM adventure the comic that the cartoonist is working on and the tale of the cartoonist a microcosm of the overall, more general slice-of-life stories of the two young people trying to find their way in life?

Wheeler: Yes. Very good. I look at it as all the characters have had too much coffee and they each are reacting to it in different ways. It's also a way for me to do a comic book with my limited attention span and not be bored.

CBG: Your stories of the life of the cartoonist are very amusing. I find your reverse stereotyping to be hilarious, in that it is the cartoonist who is the big, ugly, brooding geek of a guy and the comics-shop clerk who is nicely groomed and looks like an average citizen on the street. Is this intentional? Is the cartoonist a parody of you? You are anything but a "big, brooding geek."

Wheeler: This way, people tell me that I'm much better-looking than the character in my comic book. If it were the other way around, I'd get those akward, dissapointed looks. I was also trying to draw the emotional side of myself when I work. I wanted to express the frustration and difficulty of drawing a comic book. It's hard work.

CBG: How did you go about getting the word out about TMCM*? What was the most challenging obstacle to overcome in publicizing* TMCM*?*

Wheeler: I'm still trying to get the word out! The most challenging obstacle is my own life. I have insecurities, neurosis and a social life that keeps getting in my way.

CBG: Is there an outline from which you work or do you just get an idea and sketch it out?

Wheeler: I work from every angle. I have little notes, a sketchbook, a writer's book, specific conversations, and general outlines. But I do have a large story arc that I'm trying to get out. It's going a lot slower than I ever thought. Of course, it's going better than I would have thought, too.

CBG: What are your plans for TMCM*? Do you plan to do a trade paperback collecting all the* TMCM issues?

Wheeler: I'm putting out a hardback, which should be out by the end of March, that collects all the Too Much Coffee Man stories that are not in my comic books. It turns out that I've done more than 100 pages of material on the side while I was doing my comic book. It will include the early mini-comics and the story from Jab, the anthology that we shot with a gun.

Also, Dark Horse is going to reprint the TMCM stories which appeared in Dark Horse Presents in July. I've done a new cover and reworked some of the interior art.

CBG: What are Shannon's plans for Shannon in the near future? Do you have any new comics works in the pipeline, other animation deals, anything you'd like to talk about?

Wheeler: I would like to get a couple more comic books out. An animation company in Los Angeles, called Invision Entertainment, is developing a cartoon of Too Much Coffee Man. Bob Dorough [of Schoolhouse Rock fame] has done a theme song for it. The web site was fun to do — we're now putting a new cartoon up on the site each week.

CBG: What about the Converse Sport shoe deal? How did it come about that they used TMCM in their ad?

Wheeler: They just called me up out of the blue. I first thought it was one of my friends doing a prank phone call, so I was really rude. Maybe my attitude helped. I was embarrassed once I realized it was for real but I didn't say anything. I had a great time working on that thing. I was pretty lucky.

CBG: Many cartoonists find it difficult to live off of the sales of their comics. Do you have another job aside from TMCM*, or is* TMCM your sole income?

Wheeler: It is most of my income. But it's more than the comic book. All the side stuff I sell, like T-shirts and mugs, helps out. I also do freelance illustration, but that's mainly because I want to, and it's easier and it's more money. But it has been a lot of work to get here, and I feel pretty lucky. A whole lot of work. [Smiles] A trust-fund baby I ain't.

CBG: Anything else you would like to add?

Wheeler: I guess I'd like to add that people shouldn't drink coffee because it is bad for you.

Publisher's Picks & Retailer Reviews

A number of publishers were recently asked to choose, from the material they have scheduled to ship in May, which titles they felt would be most worthy of the attention of readers and collectors. Participating retailers were then asked to predict how popular each title will be and to grade each preview from A+ to F, according to how successful they found it as a work of art or entertainment.

HEAD OF THE CLASS

Rib #1

Caliber Comics
40 pages, B/W, $2.95

Caliber's Joe Pruett says: "Andrew Ford's creation Rib has been getting attention from many of today's high-profile comics professionals. There's a reason for all this: It's a good comic book. Andrew and artist Michael Kelleher have crafted a world much like our own, filled with hatred, prejudices, and fear, but with one exception: Human-sized worms are the oppressed minority. This difference allows Rib to honestly explore what it is that separates one race from another and why we 'can't all just get along.' Rib is the story of a worm searching for the truth about his people's past, in a human society that is largely against him. It's also about one's true identity and place in a world rife with prejudice and hate. It's a touching story that will move you and cause you to pause and think. After reading the first issue, perhaps you'll see why Rib has been mentioned in the same breath as Art Spiegelman's landmark book Maus."

Denbow: Employing realistically rendered humans and their world while adding the cartoonish worm, Rib achieves the same sort of effect as Spiegelman's Maus. It adds a sense of reality and drama to the situations and allows the reader to easily identify with the hardships of the main character, Rib.

I enjoyed this first issue very much, as Ford makes excellent use of the theme of alienation. Recommended for anyone who likes a good, character-driven story. Grade: A+.

Biggers: Andrew Ford's Rib is a low-key strip, a story that can worm its way into your mind — pun intended. Ford and Kelleher tell the story of a worm trying to learn all about people. As he carries out his quest, you'll learn a little bit more about people, too. Ford avoids becoming maudlin or preachy, which is a major asset — far too many writers would have found the temptation irresistible. And for fans who aren't familiar with Rib, Caliber has a real deal: a 40-page first issue for the price of 32 pages, reprinting the original self-published Rib #1, supplemented with 20 new pages. Grade: A-.

Lawton: For a worm, Rib is not nearly as disgusting as he might be, which is a good thing, since I read this preview over a plate of spaghetti. Still, the idea of worms is disgusting to somebody, or else they wouldn't be the target of such a bigoted response from the humans in Rib. When this young worm comes to the big city in order to find a job and, more importantly, some facts about his past, he's lucky to stumble upon some humans who welcome him. But it won't be long until Rib encounters some real hatred.

This story has a nice, quiet pace and isn't afraid to take its own time in getting where it wants to be. This is to Ford's credit, since making Rib face undiluted bigotry from the moment he first appears on the page would have diminished the quality of the storytelling and, frankly, turned Rib into a rant. Grade: A.

Mateer: How to describe this? Let's take Bone and mix it with Alien Nation and Ralph Ellison's Invisible Man. Too much?

The point of Rib is to allow an examination-by-analogy of race relations in the U.S. and use a series of themes about bigotry and its corrosive effect on society. Surprisingly, this works, by managing not to be heavy-handed or terribly preachy about things and by providing well-drawn characters that the reader can begin to care about. Caliber's press release compares this to Maus, which is unfair to what's basically just a quiet little story. (Gee, thanks for the pressure, guys.) Pick up the first issue of this story, anyway, though — it's offbeat, fascinating, and human in the best sense of the word. Grade: B+.

Ginsberg: If you missed my plug for Rib when it was self-published, now's the time to check out this endearing worm-laden title. This is an A+ all the way and perhaps the best of the bunch this month!

Curse of the Spawn #9

Image Comics
32 pages, color, $1.95

Image's Ronna Vladic says: "There is a rift in Limbo, and it is causing havoc in Heaven and Hell, as well as upon the Earth. Angela is drawn into the conflict and forced to reflect upon her own existence. Who is she? Where did she come from? Why does God have an army of celestial beauties protecting the gates of Heaven from the hordes of Hell? Plus, Angela remembers her first encounter with a Hellspawn." The issue is written by Alan McElroy, pencilled by Dwayne Turner, and inked by Danny Miki.

Lawton: In which guest star Angela asks some deeply philosophical questions. Who is she? Where does she come from? Why does God make her wear such a flimsy bodice? Grade: C.

Mateer: Thirteen publishers sent picks this month, and all but Image sent photocopies of the actual comic books. Image sent a one-page photocopy of their ad for Curse of Spawn #9 from the Diamond Previews catalog. Sigh. Like, yo, Image dudes, we can't review a comic book unless we actually have art and story from it, you know? Grade: Incomplete.

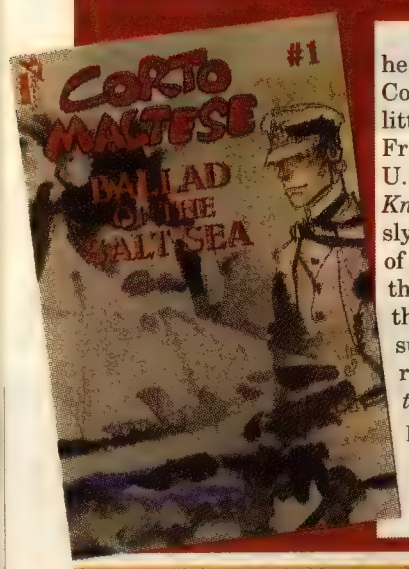
Corto Maltese #1

NBM, 24 pages, B/W, $2.95

NBM's Terry Nantier says: "Written and drawn by Hugo Pratt, who recently pased away, the Corto Maltese series of graphic novels has been published by NBM since 1986. The first issue of this new bimonthly comic-book series will present, for the first time in English, Corto's 'origin' story, 'Ballad of the Salt Sea.' This could be a good way for people to sample Corto without having to commit to an expensive book. Corto Maltese cuts a fascinating figure of heroism, nonchalance, mystery, biting wit, and craftiness, popping up in the most fascinating parts of the world in the midst of turmoil and change in the early part of this century."



Mateer: Even if you've never heard of Hugo Pratt, the name Corto Maltese probably stirs a little recognition — it's the name Frank Miller gives the island the U.S. is fighting over in The Dark Knight Returns. That's Miller's sly tribute to a master artist, one of the great comics storytellers of the 20th century. This is a project that deserves every comics fan's support, the same as Carl Barks reprints, EC reprints, Terry and the Pirates reprints, and other projects of top creators of the past. Really, if your knowledge of cool comics starts and ends at Image, Marvel, and DC, pick this comic book up, and prepare to enjoy a wonderful ride. Grade: A+.

Lawton: A solid adventure comic book, featuring a post-Victorian James Bond, this is particularly appealing for its lack of gadgetry and gee-whiz hi-tech attitude. Readers, especially adults, with a sense of history will appreciate a step back into a different time. Not only is Ballad of the Salt Sea set in the early years of the century, but it reflects a type of storytelling from years ago, as well: the pulp adventure novel. Chock-full of pirates, natives, rich hostages, and feisty beauties, this comic book makes me want to hop up on a stool at the counter and drink a couple of malteds while reading. Grade: B.

Ginsberg: From page 1, there is an immediate undercurrent of apprehension and tension, almost palpable with sinister intent. It may be slightly confusing as a jumping-on point — repeated references to a mysterious character called "The Monk" might detract from the enjoyment of new readers. Fans of Terry and the Pirates, Steve Canyon, and the like will devour this issue, then acquire the earlier books collecting the series. Grade: B.

Bennett: The only thing wrong with manga is there's never been the same explosion of interest in European comics in America. NBM has gone a long way to correct that by bringing Corto Maltese to us. Let's make this a success, so we can also see Blake & Mortimer, and (please) more Spirou & Fantasio, now that Fantasy Flight Publications will no longer be doing it. Grade: A.

Retailers' grade: A-

The Griffin #1

Slave Labor Graphics, $2.95

Slave Labor's Dan Vado says: "Originally published in 1987, one of the earliest Slave Labor comics comes full circle and returns home, as The Griffin is relaunched under SLG's Amaze Ink imprint. The new title picks up where the original left off, telling the story of Matt Williams who returns, after a long absence, to an Earth that has forgotten him. With alien conspiracies and the threat of invasion always looming, The Griffin has elements that will appeal to fans of movies like Independence Day or shows like The X-Files."

Biggers: The Griffin is probably my favorite comic book to appear under the Slave Labor banner, so you can understand why I'm so glad to see it's returning to the shelves in May. Alas, original series artist Norman Felchle is only around for the cover art, and new artist Phil Allora lacks the polish that Felchle brought to the series. But Vado's script is just as strong as ever, and it's great to see Matt Williams back in action again. If you haven't been paying attention to Slave Labor's Amaze Ink imprint already, with books like Scarlet Thunder, Replacement God, and Mister Blank, then it's about time you checked 'em out. Grade: A-.

Mateer: When The Griffin was last seen, almost 10 years ago, it offered a good, character-driven SF story. Now, Vado's back with Matt Williams continuing adventures — and it's still good, character-driven SF. Enough recap is provided to keep new readers from getting lost, and this is a solid story, worth checking out if you like space opera. Grade: B.

Lawton: Interesting enough SF thriller with excellent uncluttered illustrations from Allora. The story is relatively straightforward and, thankfully, not pumped up with a lot of convoluted mysticism. Fun, but no great shakes. Grade: B-.

Ginsberg: The intriguing premise is supported by a strong script, a quick pace, and Slave Labor's usual competent and interestingly quirky art style. I give this a B- for being familiar but with a difference.

Denbow: The Griffin is a nicely drawn action-adventure series that deals with themes of friendship and family, as well. Grade: A.

Bennett: When people remember comics in the '80s, it's only to recount with horror the excesses of the black-and-white glut. Me, I fondly recall grand characters like Dr. Radium, Hero Sandwich, and of course, The Griffin. What made Vado's superb space opera so special was that it was about something more than quick-and-nasty violent fun — the characters really were the stars of the series. So I'm delighted to see it back, with some fine art from Allora matching the high standards of the original series. Hero Sandwich next, OK, Dan? Grade: B.

Retailers' grade: B+

Gunsmith Cats: Shades of Gray #1

Dark Horse Comics, B/W, $2.95

Dark Horse's Lou Bank says: "It's chock full of action! It's amazingly well-drawn! It's terrifying and hilarious at the same time! If you like guns, gals, and guts, if you like fast-paced crime comics, then you'll love Gunsmith Cats: Shades of Gray! Rally Vincent is a gunsmith by trade — but she earns her living hunting bounties. Usually she gets paid in cash, though sometimes information pays better interest. That's the case when she catches up with her latest target, an engaging con man named Logan. Logan's got the lowdown on Gray, the vicious killer who wants to catch Rally by the tail, and he intends to parlay that prize for all it's worth in Shades of Gray." The five-issue mini-series is by Kenichi Sonoda.

Denbow: Dark Horse has been contributing a fine collection of manga releases to the world of comics, and Kenichi Sonoda's Gunsmith Cats has been lighting fires in the hearts of American comics fans... Rally Vincent is one fun gal — who always hits her target. Grade: A.

Ginsberg: Replete with bumbling hitmen and fast-and-fancy cars, this action-packed gangster drama transcends the manga milieu as Rally, together with wide-eyed sidekick Minnie-May, takes on the bad guys. Perhaps that is why Gunsmith Cats is a perennial best-seller, garnering new readers merely by word-of-mouth. Grade: C+.

Bennett: Although the "crime comic book" has been making a comeback (Jinx, Sin City, Stray Bullets, Trespassers, etc.), what's been missing is a good old-fashioned '70s-style "buddy cop" action show — and it's deftly delivered by Gunsmith Cats. There are double-crosses, lots of rough-and-tumble action, tire-squealing car chases, flying bullets, and a last-minute twist. The only thing missing is the girls' scruffy-but-lovable comedic street snitch. If you don't like manga, try this one. Grade: B.

Lawton: This fun, noirish comic has a decidedly feminist slant. Rally Vincent is the daintiest bounty hunter this side of a Hello Kitty purse, but she's also among the best in the business. Kenichi Sonoda's art is sharp and clean and happily free of the chaos of lot of recent Japanese comics. Even better is the translation from Dana Lewis and Toren Smith, which is compelling and coherent. Grade: B.

Mateer: As more young U.S. artists come into the comics field with distinct manga influences, sales on the "real" stuff — the Japanese translations — continue to rise (try finding back issues of Ranma 1/2, for example). Gunsmith Cats is no exception. Back issues are scarce, and current issues sell out (of admittedly modest print runs) quickly. This title is a good example of noir manga: no future robots or outer-space plots, just gritty, street-level gangsters, guns, and gals. If most manga seems too complicated or off-putting to you, this title is a great place to start. Grade: A-.

Retailers' grade: B+

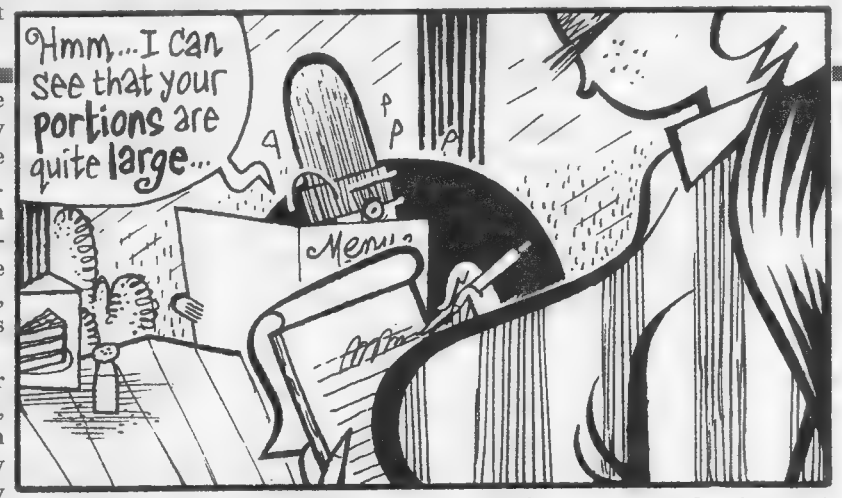
Tug & buster #6

Art & Soul Comics
32 pages, B/W, $2.95

Creator Marc Hempel says: "It's a bellyful of belly laughs, as Buster, Stinkfinger, and Genital Ben head out on the town for a bite to eat. But why is Buster's mom keeping the ol' Tugster at home? What exactly is the 'Chef's Surprise'? And what dark, sordid thoughts are keeping Stinkfinger from digesting his food properly? Includes balloon animals, ham-to-ham combat, and a Woody Guthrie joke. Get ready for seven-course culinary comedy in 'Feast Don't Fail Me Now!'"



"If you can avoid a title that includes a character named Genital Ben, then you are a stronger person than I am."
— Steve Ginsberg

Denbow: Marc Hempel's Tug & Buster has been around for a bit but hasn't received all the attention it deserves. If you loved Hempel's Gregory, then this comic book is for you. In issue #6, Buster takes us on the roller-coaster story "Me & Tug 'n' Stinkfinger 'n' Genital Ben's goin' out ta eat!" or "Feast Don't Fail Me Now!" Tug, of course, is the hulkish and cool ladies-man type of guy, and Buster is his little pal. Together, the suave one and the squirt proceed from one beer-swilling, real-guy, out-for-fun adventure after another. There's no sissy stuff in this jocular comic book, where controlled insanity is always on the menu. Great fun and a feast of a good time are guaranteed. (And you'll surely love Hempel's very stylish art.) If you dig Evan Dorkin's Hectic Planet storics and Milk & Cheese, you have to try this tasty morsel, too! Grade: A.

Ginsberg: Hey, buddy, if you still haven't checked out Marc Hempel's Tug & Buster, then pull my Stinkfinger, because you sure are missing some hilarious mayhem. If you can avoid a title that includes a character named Genital Ben, then you are a stronger person than I am. And manly man Tug, he of the flammable pompadour, is every woman's incarnation of the strong, silent type — kinda. The irony of the angst-ridden John, a.k.a. Stinkfinger, wearing a yin/yang t-shirt as he swears his way through traffic, is one of the more subtle hints at humor.

Buster and pals Stinkfinger and Genital Ben go to the mall, leaving Tug behind with Buster's mom, who apparently has a legume fetish. You may never look at food the same way again. Asking the timeless questions philosophers have asked throughout history, "Is it polite to secrete at the table?" and "We don't go around killing stupid people, do we?" you can see that Tug & Buster addresses the larger moral dilemmas and ethical issues we all face. I give it an 'A' for attitude.

Mateer: This is a special All-Food Issue, as the boys (with Buster's mom and Tug staying home), go out to eat. See Genital Ben have fun with the seatbelt restraints! See Buster come on to the waitress! See Buster's mom and Tug — um, wait, maybe you want to wait a little before you see that. Hempel is a wonderful writer and craftsman, with well-composed panels and clever bits on every page, and, if you've never picked this comic book up before, this is a good issue to start with.

So, why didn't I like this preview as much as I though I would? Maybe it's that, after six issues, all the characters have been established and aren't actually changing; they come on, do their clever lines, ring the changes on their clever concepts, and that's it (this is also the problem I eventually had with Hempel's earlier and just as clever Gregory). Is it just me? Is it an inevitable sophomore slump, one that Tug and Buster can pull out of in time? Is it a function of the universe's tendency toward increasing entropy? Oh, heck — buy the comic; it's still better than 80% of the stuff on the racks. Grade: B.

Bennett: It's amazing how far you can stretch one joke before it breaks. Tug & Buster shouldn't be nearly this consistently funny and satisfying: the "characters" are wafer-thin, the "sits" in this "com" numbingly plausible. So apply all appropriate accolades to one Marc Hempel, whose lucid cartooning manages to make juggling Ping-Pong balls look like swallowing chainsaws, as we watch Buster, Stinkfinger, and Genital Ben go to dinner! Boy, have I missed these magnificent goons. Grade: A.

Bludgeon #1

Aardwolf Publishing
24 pages, B/W, $2.25

Aardwolf's David Chlystek says: "The comic-book market has spoken. Fans are sick of the same old super-hero rehash bashes, 'Bad Girls,' and bad comics. The whole of fandom is looking for the 'Next Big Thing' to transform them, to get them fired up again about comic books. Well, here it is: The 'Next Big Thing' is coming in May and its name is Bludgeon. Bludgeon is an artificial being created by the powerful N-Corporation to eliminate its chief rival, Virtual Reality mogul Adrian Adonis. The first issue introduces readers to such characters as Red Greene, teen-age homicide detective, and U.S. President/entertainer Nathaniel Simmons."

"Surrender your pre-conceptions and enjoy the ride."
— S.A. Bennett

Lawton: Give David Chlystek credit for his bluster. "The next big thing" is what comics fandom has asked for and the next big thing is what he and Joe St. Pierre have delivered. That their version of the next big thing resembles The Hulk wearing Geordie LaForge's eyeglasses seems like quibbling. Though Chlystek and St. Pierre do a reasonable enough job in making their "Colossus yearning for something more" story interesting, it is the time and place in which they've set the comic book that really grabs this reader. In an America that finds its politicians finally dissolving the line between leadership and entertainment, President Nathaniel Simmons makes his initial entrance like a pint-sized James Brown. Frankly, more President Simmons and less Bludgeon, and I'll come back for more. Grade: B.

Mateer: Bludgeon's title character is an artificial assassin, created by one corporation to kill its chief rival, and this first issue tracks his/its efforts to fulfill that mission, while introducing the reader to a future dystopia involving U.S. corporations run amok, politicians who are actually just entertainers, elite security guards, kid cops — you know, the usual suspects. Bludgeon's Hulk-like appearance complements its attempts to transcend its programming and renounce the violent tendencies it was "born" with, and there are enough nice little character bits and small surprises to keep the reader coming back for more. Grade: B-.

Ginsberg: For super-hero fans looking for something different, Bludgeon rings in with a highly professional, cartoony look and feel. This is in-your-face action, with corporate rivalries and a super-charged artificial being that drags us on a journey to a monster's self-actualization. Give it a 'B' for Bludgeon, what else?

Bennett: I thought this was going to be standard stuff, but, instead, Bludgeon gave me fresh twists and bracing takes on what could've been typical genre characters, like the cyborg himself (for a while, I thought he was wearing a stocking cap made out of meat but realized he has a gear over his eyes — which doesn't stop him from using a gun sight) and "teen-age homicide detective" Red Greene. (Guys, she's your "Next Big Thing.") Surrender your pre-conceptions and enjoy the ride. Grade: B.

Retailers' grade: B

British Annuals: Comics Wall to Wall, Cover to Cover
The Original Graphic Novel
A British tradition that started in the 1930's: large hardbound books featuring fictional & real life icons of the emerging pop culture landscape – by the mid 1950's this included comic & cartoon characters. While many annuals are multi-featured (text stories, photo features, star profiles, etc), the ones listed below are almost ALL comics. All annuals have between 60 & 90 pages unless noted. Many are full color – from the 70's and beyond are ALL color.

Self-Loathing Comics #2

Fantagraphics Books
34 pages, B/W, $3.50

Fantagraphics' Eric Reynolds says: "Robert Crumb and Aline Komisky-Crumb have completed their first new comic book in more than two years and their first since the release of the documentary Crumb. Self-Loathing Comics #2 continues in a similar vein to 1995's Self-Loathing #1: a collaboration between the two creators, detailing their life in France in uninhibited fashion. Unlike the first issue, which featured separate strips by the couple, Self-Loathing Comics #2 is a 'jam-style' collaboration à la their Dirty Laundry strips. The release of any new work by R. Crumb is worth celebrating. Fans of the Crumbs and Self-Loathing #1 will not be disappointed by the second issue."

"Kind of like being on laughing gas with your favorite married friends."
— Tom Lawton

Lawton: This extraordinary conversation-duologue between R. Crumb and Aline Kominsky-Crumb is almost embarrassingly revelatory. Not just because we're learning intimate secrets of their lives together, but because the elements of their lives can be found in our own and in our relationships with the people we love. To hear someone say (or write) some of the deepest, darkest things that we have thought is incredibly creepy. But, because Self-Loathing features such run-of-the-mill situations and since the Crumbs seem so comfortable with each other, one forgets to be embarrassed. From their thoughts on sex, anti-Semitism, and their fellow writers, to their shared use of each panel, this comic book is phenomenally funny. Kind of like being on laughing gas with your favorite married friends. Grade: A+.

Mateer: What would it be like to hang around with Robert and Aline Crumb, in their little French cottage near Avignon? This slice-of-life look at them walking around the French countryside, visiting with artist friends and listening to Robert work through his cranky attitudes toward life, commerce, art, sex, and Jewish people (not necessarily in that order), is the closest the rest of us are going to get to finding out. As Aline says at one point: "Anyway, this is just a rambling bunch of nonsense ... if we weren't Mr. and Mrs. King and Queen, nobody would read this stuff." They are the king and queen, though, and anyone interested in all the "reality" comics of the last few years, from Lowlife to Hate to American Splendor to Maus, should want to see what the Old Master is up to. A trip inside the Crumbs' heads is not for the faint of heart, but it's definitely rewarding — and it's oddly comforting to see that they're still together and in love after all these years. (Featuring special crossover guest appearances by Art Spiegelman and Charles Burns!) Grade: A.

Ginsberg: From the existential and self-actualizing Rib that I just finished reading to R. and Aline's self-absorbed Self-Loathing Comics — the leap is almost whiplash-inducing.

You may hate yourself if you don't read Self-Loathing. Where else can you get a politically incorrect swordfight and a cameo by a Pulitzer prize-winner? This is compelling reading, in a voyeuristic way. It's a journey to the Gallic land of the Chateau de Dysfunction, nestled by the Rue de Self-Absorbed.

Graced with Crumb's inimitable art style, the narrative ultimately degenerates into a whiny, self-indulgent battle of "I'm more pathetic than you." If, like me, you have trouble feeling empathy or sympathy for a couple that seems to have it all, it is still a worthwhile expenditure of some time and a couple of bucks. After all, it is the first new comic by the Crumbs in two years.

Bennett: Autobiographical comics are, forgive me, frequently nothing but the raspy gasps of existentially inert 20-somethings always on the verge of almost doing something — but who just end up going home, instead. Maybe, as R. Crumb himself points out, Self-Loathing Comics is just talking heads (except for the sword-fight with Zorro — sort of), but what talk, what heads! From the first panel you're caught between "Omega Male," R. Crumb's sweaty desperate discourse on, well, everything, and the relentless Aline's more down-to-earth concerns. Aline has never received sufficient credit for her work and, here, she more than holds her own against her mega-creep/world's greatest cartoonist husband, both artistically and personally. Always fascinating and simultaneously hilarious and achingly honest, this is a tremendous achievement in comics — and great, sick fun, too. Grade: A.

Denbow: Fantagraphics brings us Crumb fans a real treat with the new Self-Loathing Comics #2. The Crumbs find themselves kvetching about their post-film lives and touch on topics such as parenting and their sex-lives. This is a perfect treat for anyone who likes alternative comics but has not yet been introduced to the strange and unique perceptions of Crumb, whom many regard as the world's greatest living cartoonist, and his wife, Aline, herself a talented cartoonist. It is also a damn fine return to comics by these revolutionary cartoonists. A+.

Judgment Day

Extreme Studios
Color

Extreme's Matt Hawkins says: "Alan Moore has engineered a major restructuring of Extreme's entire fictional universe, beginning with this title. Rob Liefeld, Dave Gibbons, Dan Jurgens, Adam Pollina, Steve Skroce, Chris Sprouse, Terry Dodson, Keith Giffen, and Ian Churchill have signed on to draw separate sections of the projected three-issue mini-series. The story weaves between past, present, and future, as it unfolds a murder mystery within the Youngblood organization. There will also be a surprise guest artist and character appearance that won't be revealed until publication."

Biggers: Judgment Day is going to be one of the most talked-about storylines of 1997. Alan Moore has been given carte blanche to reinvent the Extreme universe, and that's just what he's doing. In the process, he's proving that he didn't shoot his super-hero load with Watchmen. This story, while superficially similar (it, too, begins with the murder of a team member and proceeds through an investigation to reveal a great deal about the essence of heroics), is a joyous celebration of the quintessential appeal of comic books and super-heroes. Didn't care for the Extreme heroes previously? Well, give this series a try, because a whole new ballgame begins here. Grade: A.

Mateer: An ongoing topic on the Internet is: Why is Alan Moore working for Extreme? The conventional wisdom seems to be that he's only in it for the money, that a writer of his talent couldn't possibly enjoy working for a company that gave us characters like Youngblood, Supreme, etc.

Well, why not? Moore has always shown a lot of pleasure at playing with comics archetypes — look what he's doing with Supreme, which he's turned into an updated-but-keeping-the-best-parts tribute to Silver Age Superman comics. Being able to take a whole universe of characters that's almost a blank slate and impose some order and underlying philosophy to it must be fun.

That brings us to Judgment Day, the mini-series that starts with a major member of Youngblood being murdered, and ends up ranging through the entire history of the Extreme universe. See pirate heroes in the 1600s! See the Extreme Western heroes of the 1800s! See the detective and jungle heroes of the Victorian era! See artists like Dave Gibbons, Dan Jurgens, Rob Liefeld, and Keith Giffen illustrate various sections of the story!

Extreme sent no art with its preview — but it did send Moore's 13-page outline treatment of the whole mini-series. On the strength of that, I'd say this looks like a lot of fun — a secret history of the Extreme heroes, wrapped around a super-hero trial of the century in the Citadel Supreme. Don't ask me to reveal the "real" murderer's identity, though — buy the mini-series and find out for yourself. Grade: A-.

Note: In the absence of any preview art, the majority of our panel declined to grade this issue, hence its "incomplete" total grade.

Deapool #-1

Marvel Comics
32 pages, color, $1.95

Marvel's Ben Cramer says: "This month we've selected Deadpool, a sleeper hit which is gaining considerable buzz in the industry. Bright, fun, and original, and full of the best one-liners and hilarity in the business, this title continues to amaze, amuse, and excite." Note: Retailers' reviews of this title are based on Deadpool #4. Shipping in May is Deadpool #-1, part of Marvel's "Flashback Month," which looks back at the pre-origin past of Marvel heroes. Deadpool #1 is written by Joe Kelly and drawn by Aaron Lopresti.

Biggers: Looking for a solid, well-written, straightforward, mutant-related comic book from Marvel that's sheer fun to read? Deadpool's the title you've been looking for! The dialogue is crisp, the action level is high, the humor is truly clever, the art is dynamic, and the character is one of the few truly likeable mutants I've seen in an X-title in a long, long time. And best of all, you don't have to refer to an encyclopedia-sized reference volume to figure out how it relates to all those other mutant titles! Grade: A.

Lawton: Beginning with the hilarious splash page that attempts to bring the reader up to date, this whimsical comic book reminds me of the insouciant glory years at Marvel, although it does get overly cute, especially during the fight scenes. Whoever wrote this, and the name escaped me in my mad rush to meet deadline, is way too obsessed with bad television. And, for the record, one's lust for Susan Dey should not blur the fact that her character's name was L-a-u-r-i-e Partridge. I know; I read the teen novels. Grade: B-.

Mateer: It's nice to see Marvel submitting material for us to review again. After two years of turmoil, the House of Ideas seems to be getting back on track. Deadpool is a good example: It's amusing fun, managing to combine Deadpool's Ambush Bug-like I-know-I'm-in-a-comic-book wisecracks with an actual dramatic plot. The creators do a skillful tightrope walk here, where in the midst of much tongue-in-cheek byplay you actually start to care what happens to the mouthy little merc. This title isn't meant to set the world on fire, but it's an enjoyable 10-minute read — and sometimes that's all you want from a comic book. Grade: B-.

Retailers' grade: B

Other recommendations

Ginsberg: Quick self-publishing pick: When the Ankh of power and light sears itself into our heroine's ample chest — à la the new Dr. Fate — Xstacy becomes a "child of light" and "Mistress to Darkness" in Franchesco's self-published endeavor, Xstacy, The First Look Edition. It's available only through his Fresco Comics and a few select retailers. Fresco Comics, P.O. Box 1200, Melrose Park, IL 60160.

Bennett: And might I also suggest Lost Stories by John Riley and Garret Berner? I'm always losing things and have always enjoyed the concept of a "land of the lost," so I was predisposed to enjoy this wonderful fantasy about a high-school kid named I.M. Lost. There's some sharp, clean art and concise, direct writing. Lost Stories is well worth your time and attention.

Threshold: The Stamp Collector #2

Sleeping Giant Comics
32 pages, B/W, $2.50

Creator David Yurkovich says: "Inasmuch as it is an alternative super-hero title, Threshold has been, and shall remain, character-driven. Events take place in this story that could easily jeopardize the world as we know it. Yet the thrust of the story is not those events but the heroes who stand back and nonchalantly watch the events unfold. With the stars of the series literally trapped in a stamp album, a team of 'professional' heroes, the New York Super-Hero Syndicate, is called in to save the day. But the NYSS has its own agenda, and that agenda isn't necessarily what one might expect. The story is about bureacratic reluctance to intervene without first following the CYA rule of big business. The personalities of the Threshold cast members are further explored, and some unexpected truths are learned. The series' blend of comedy and horror ensure that this is not your father's super-hero team title."

"I think I'm ready to sign up for the David Yurkovich fan club. As far as I'm concerned, he's one of the most overlooked new talents in the field."
— Cliff Biggers

Mateer: Sleeping Giant has been publishing the Threshold series for more than a year now — one- and two-issue stories set on an alternate Earth, where the first-tier super-heroes are unionized (and won't go into action for a city unless they get a contract with very good health benefits), and the second-tier heroes operate out of places like Philadelphia. Threshold is one such secondary group, and its adventures are an interesting mix of comedy and drama. I like the little touches (at one point, we see a box of Disney videos, but, since it's an alternate Earth, they have titles like Disney's The Metamorphosis and Aladdin: South Korea Tour of Duty), and I like the way things are never wrapped up neatly, but left with loose plotlines dangling — just like real life. This is worth a try. If you prefer that your super-hero comic books not be taken straight, it might be for you. Grade: B-.

Lawton: Those of you out there who think that Cranky Tom never likes anything with super-heroes in it can once again be assured that a really good super-hero comic book will not go without notice from this quarter. I say "once again," because, last year, we lucky retailers got to write about David Yurkovich's wonderful comic book Threshold.

Well, Yurkovich is back with a new issue, and, if the tights-and-capes crowd isn't reading him yet, they're missing a real treat, because these are super-hero comics with wit and irreverence for convention but a real reverence for the super-hero ethos. When the members of Threshold are unable to protect their city from danger, New York's team of heroes, a group of mercenaries more fit for the boardroom than the street enter into protracted but hilarious negotiations to help out. Meanwhile, Threshold wanders about, caught in one of the more inventive villainous traps of recent years.

Yurkovich's writing is breezy, occasionally silly, but never adolescent. These heroes never talk down to their readers, and rarely have heroes been so appealing to adults. Music lovers should also note that there are a plethora of music references throughout. On first reading, I found references to Glenn Miller, Styx, Cheap Trick, and Romeo Void. What fun! Grade: A.

Ginsberg: The quirkiest super-hero team in comics returns, courtesy of self-publisher David Yurkovich. Trapped inside a stamp-collector's album are the members of Threshold, impotent to stop the physical manifestation that menaces the center-city streets of Philadelphia.

Fortuitously, the Big Apple's team, NYSS, are on hand to combat this evil. It is up to the somewhat ineffective T.W. (short for Thermonuclear Warhead) to end the carnage. Of course, no action can be taken until the mayor and NYSS negotiator Brain-Blaster iron out the contract regarding liability and video and ancillary rights.

If you're guessing this is a super-hero comic that is waaay different, you'd be right. Together with his other title, Death By Chocolate, Yurkovich is mapping out his own bizarre reality that non-conformists should enjoy.

Biggers: I think I'm ready to sign up for the David Yurkovich fan club. As far as I'm concerned, he's one of the most overlooked new talents in the field, and I'm hoping that more people discover just how much entertainment he packs into every issue of his various titles for Sleeping Giant Press. Threshold: The Stamp Collector Part Two continues the story of Yurkovich's super-heroes with feet of clay in their war against one of the zanier villains you've ever met. There are little touches galore that make it clear that Yurkovich is having fun doing this comic book — the delightful stamp-bordered panels on every page, for instance — but the real charm of this series is its continued emphasis on strong characterization and the juxtaposition of the heroic and the mundane. Grade: A.

HEAD OF THE CLASS

Pride & Joy

DC Comics

32 pages, color, $2.50

DC's Scott Nybakken says: "In projects as diverse as Preacher, Hitman, and Bloody Mary, writer Garth Ennis has displayed an astonishing ability to explore the humanity at the heart of the souls of devils, mercenaries, and metahumans. Now, in this four-issue Vertigo mini-series drawn by John Higgins, Ennis looks into the souls of ordinary human beings and finds an entirely new kind of evil. Both a violent crime drama and the story of a father's evolving relationship with his son, Pride & Joy is filled with intrigue, dark humor, and gunplay and displays Ennis' flair for well-paced, emotionally charged, page-turning horror." The title is not recommended for children.

Mateer: Jimmy has two kids, memories of his dead wife, and a good enough life, until one day he gets a phone call, with a quiet voice on the other end, from a man he thought was in prison forever — then all hell starts to break loose.

The great thing about DC's Vertigo imprint is that you don't have to have super-heroes, or even magic or fantasy elements — a well-told story will do just fine. Some of the Vertigo titles have a tendency toward pretentiousness, but writer Garth Ennis is Mr. Anti-pretentious, and this compelling story of a good man trying to defend his children and friends under pressure picks you up from the first sentences ("Blood only flows downstream. It's got nowhere else to go.") and doesn't let go until the shocking last panel. Highly recommended. Grade: A+.

Lawton: This tense update of "The Five Orange Pips" is very well-written by Garth Ennis and blends the visceral buzz of a thriller with a healthy dose of family values. Jimmy Kavanagh, widower, tries to bring up his daughter and adolescent son with differing degrees of success. In the middle of this familial muddle comes a mysterious phone call that sends the family fleeing. Meanwhile, two escaped convicts are searching for Jimmy, as well. The legitimately shocking use of gore at the end works, because the creators have not beaten us over the head with it. I look forward to the next three issues. Grade: A.

Bennett: I'm not sure why this four-issue mini-series is being published as a Vertigo title, because, so far, there are no supernatural elements — and spooks need not apply. Pride & Joy is classic noir: a family man with a dark secret, his unknowing kids, ex-cons on the lam, and the ominous off-panel killer after them all. Garth Ennis shows remarkable restraint, letting us get to know the characters, and John Higgins shows tremendous skill at creating a mood of impending disaster that hangs over seemingly everyday scenes. Together, they keep us waiting and waiting, as the situation builds and builds, until the final page hits us on the head like a shovel. Grade: A.

Archie & Friends #24

Archie Comic Publications

32 pages, color, $1.50

Archie's Paul Castiglia says: ""The lead story in May's edition of this popular title offers a special treat for Archie fans: the return of Cricket O'Dell and Frankie Valdez. With 57 years of publishing behind us, we've had the advantage of an expansive Archieverse — featuring many supporting characters in addition to the standard cast of Riverdale teens, faculty, and parents. Some of these co-stars have gone on to fame in their own right (Sabrina the Teenage Witch, Cheryl Blossom, Josie & The Pussycats), while others pop up from time to time for the occasional visit. Two of the most requested characters are Cricket O'Dell and Frankie Valdez. We expect this story to appeal to older readers who feel nostalgic toward these characters, as well as younger readers thrilled to meet them for the first time."

Ginsberg: The Archies go on tour. First stop: Cedarville and a visit with old friend Cricket O'Dell. Cricket is blessed(?) with the quirky power of being able to sniff out wealth, right to the penny. When Mr. Lodge runs into the gang after the concert, Cricket says, "I smell more wealth than I've ever smelled before ... It's beautiful."

Having now reviewed numerous Archie titles that were entertaining but filled with fickle, self-centered, and spoiled characters, I've decided that I don't much like these people so I give this one a "C" for Cricket's currency consciousness.

Mateer: I'm always amazed at how consistent Archie and his friends are — I was pricing a stack of '60s Archies last week, and remembering them from my own youth, and the new ones have the same sense of familiar characters and professional, let's-tell-the-story-amusingly-and-well scripts. (I tend to think the '60s stories were a bit better, but that's probably just nostalgia — as more than one person in CBG has pointed out, the Golden Age of Comics for any reader is when that reader was about 12 years old.) At any rate, here the gang are, on the road, playing concerts and meeting up with old friends, and the result is a pleasant, 10-minute diversion. Grade: B -

Denbow: In this issue, Archie and the band go on tour and stop in Cedarville, where they meet with their old friend, Cricket O'Dell, who has "a nose" for telling how much change you have on your person. Needless to say, she joins the band to help track their finances. Frankie joins, too, as the group's roadie, and the pair make fun additions to the Archie family. This issue is sure to please both older fans who remember Cricket and Frankie from issues past, as well as new fans who are meeting them for the first time. A.

Alternative Press INDIES

"Eventually, the milieu of mini-comics started seeming too cramped and confined, and I decided to push myself to do something that wasn't deliberately obscure, primitive, and difficult."
— Jon Lewis

By Jeff Mason

It used to be a surprise when the latest popular comic book was created by a 20-something comic-book artist/writer with no little or no formal art training. Nowadays it is a surprise if the latest popular creator is someone other than a 20-something comic-book artist/writer with little or no formal training. Some comic-book creators continue to surprise readers, no matter what their background is. Jon Lewis is one of those creators. With two critically acclaimed series — True Swamp and Ghost Ship — under his belt, Jon Lewis is now creating Spectacles to look at more realistic stories.

Lewis, like many of his creative contemporaries today, had little formal artistic training. "I got sick for a few years starting when I was 17," he said, "so that kind of ruled out college or even completing high school."

Like a number of his contemporaries, he had been doing comics most of his life already, originally only to please himself, "but during the years I was sick, I started them with a potential reader in mind for the first time," he said.

He took advantage of the burgeoning mini-comics underground in the late 1980s to distribute his own mini-comics and receive valuable feedback. "I did them, usually 16 pages or so, photocopied, from 1988 to 1991, trading with a handful of other mini-comics artists through the mail."

Distributing his mini-comics through the mail is how Lewis met Tom Hart, self-publisher of Hutch Owens Working Hard and creator of Black Eye's The Sands series. "Tom would eventually become my best friend and biggest source of creative support after we both ended up living in Seattle," Lewis said, "but eventually, the milieu of mini-comics started seeming too cramped and confined, and I decided to push myself to do something that wasn't deliberately obscure, primitive, and difficult."

What resulted over the course of the next 2½ years was the five-issue run of True Swamp, which earned itself a respectable cult following.

The leap from photocopier to real printing was facilitated, at first, by a grant intended for people who want to self-publish their comics work (the Xeric grant). The grant money ran out after three issues, but by then Lewis said he was "sick of the duties of publishing anyway and I had enough notoriety to convince Slave Labor to publish True Swamp."

The comic book ran its course for Lewis as a creator after two more issues. He did three issues of contra-rational stories of the high seas in his Ghost Ship comic book, also published by Slave Labor Graphics.

Lewis' other work includes Ghost Ship and True Swamp.

The material for his new series Spectacles, has been taking shape over the last year. After doing stories about animals in the swamp and surreal pirates that were all actually about everyday emotions and observations, Lewis said, "I finally just feel like doing stories that feature 'normal' people feeling everyday emotions. A lot of what drove me to feature the strange or animal characters was a disinterest in drawing human beings, but I now find that totally enjoyable and wanting to do stories with more familiar settings has followed from that."

Half of the stories in Spectacles are quieter, more "realistic" ones set in Seemington, Lewis' version of Seattle. The other half are chapters of a longer, stranger serial that deals simultaneously with his feelings for Minnesota, because "it's where I grew up," Lewis said, and his interest in the folklore and legends of Scandinavia, because "that is where half of my family originates."

The Scandinavian story has a large, recurring cast, and the Seemington stories, while self-contained, visit certain characters more than once.

Spectacles is published quarterly by Alternative Press, 611 NW 34th Drive, Gainesville, FL 32607.*

In "Land of the Early Bird" from Spectacles #1, Mo receives a check early one morning and contemplates what to do with it.

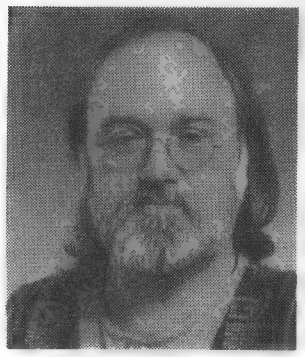
PRICE GUIDE

COMIC BOOK PRICES - SILVER AGE TO PRESENT

The Price Is Right — Isn't It?

CBG Associate Editor Brent Frankenhoff passed along word that someone had asked about Cerebus prices; he had heard that prices were falling on the title, but noticed that CBG's prices for Dave Sim's series hadn't taken any major drops recently, and he couldn't figure out why.

Welcome to the wonderful world of comic-book pricing!



Cliff Biggers

"Welcome to the wonderful world of comic-book pricing!"

Every month, I get price information from a variety of retailers — and quite often, the information I get doesn't jibe, at least not straight across the board. It's not uncommon for several people to report higher prices on a comic book, while several others make no mention of it. It really gets weird, though, when I get reports of rising prices from some sources and falling prices from others, all in the same month. And I hope Sim doesn't mind me using his Cerebus as an example.

It's no secret that Cerebus orders, like orders for many other independents, have fallen recently. I say it's no secret, because anyone with a calculator and a reference library of Diamond sales charts can figure that out. Some retailers blame it on a flat market. Others think the reliability of Sim's "phonebook" release schedule has cut into demand for monthly issues. Still others think it might have something to do with the "flavor of the month" syndrome.

But just because Cerebus sales have dropped a bit overall, doesn't mean that they've dropped a bit in every location. I hear from some retailers who have lost half or more of their Cerebus readership; I hear from others who haven't lost any sales at all or have even picked up a few extra readers.

And if you think it's tough to make new comics sales trends apply to every retail store, imagine how much tougher it is to apply trends in back-issue sales.

Michael Dean, CBG's hard-working news editor who keeps in touch with me regarding the CBG Price Guide, suggested that maybe the trend was regional. A quick check of sales charts confirmed what I had thought to be the case: In the major regions as defined by Cliff (the Southeast, the Northeast, the North Central, the Northwest, the Southwest, and California), I found examples of each trend. Here's a store reporting lower sales in both new issues and back issues, with some drops in prices. But here's a store reporting higher prices for some issues of Cerebus and strong demand. And they're in the same region.

If there's any trend, it might be this: The stores that report the most price changes on independent and alternative comics also tend to report higher prices in general on Cerebus. But even that's not universally true. Heck, I'm not sure if anything's universally true in this business — I've even found people who didn't like Kingdom Come and who don't worship Jack Kirby like a comic-book god.

And here's another general rule of price-guide information compiling: The very process of investigating a comic book often seems to affect prices. Or, at least, it makes people aware of changes in demand. Inevitably, if I ask the reporting stores to give me information on any given comic book, whether it's Cerebus, Wolverine, Neat Stuff, Bone, Crisis on Infinite Earths, or Vigil, I see a far greater change in status on the comic book, across the board, than if I don't ask. Does that mean that retailers jacked the prices up just because I asked them about the title in question? No, it just means that retailers are overworked, and in many cases they didn't realize that their prices had climbed above the last-listed levels until I called their attention to it. Although I said that the process of asking seemed to affect prices, it would be more accurate to say that asking about a title just makes retailers aware of the changes in the prices that they have been charging all along.

It would be great if a guide could reflect the latest prices on every single comic book listed in its pages — but, as far as I know, no guide surveys every participating retailer on prices for every single title. We ask about certain comic books, we take general reports, we try to follow up on trends — and the information we end up with is sometimes contradictory. That's where it gets difficult. What do you do when four retailers report an increase in price and one reports a decline? (Other than put the other four retailers in touch with the fifth guy, that is.) In that case, you go with the increase. But it gets more difficult if the ratio is closer, like three increasing and two decreasing. Then you calculate the rate of increase and decrease and, if the net result is a marginal change, you leave it alone, and five guys are convinced that you're ignoring them, because they all reported changes — just not the same changes. sigh

Thankfully, the Cerebus factor (Brent will be forever remembered for leading me to name this mixed-signal trend after the comic book that led to all this discussion) occurs relatively rarely in the comics field: Most titles are clearly increasing in value (like I, Lusiphur) or decreasing in value (like Harbingers). But now, you have some idea why every now and then you'll see no change on a comic book that has either gone up or gone down in price at your local shop.

The Winners of last month's contest:

Hurry, the deadline is Monday, April 7, 1997. Winners will be announced in the next CBG Price Guide Supplement, which will be in CBG #1224.

On Top Of The Trends

OUR INDEPENDENTS PRICE LISTING D-G FOLLOWS IN THIS SECTION.

Marketplace Minutes

Over the past couple of months, the market for "Bad Girl" comic books has declined noticeably.

The titles hurt the most by this decline are comic books from smaller publishers who have generally been carried to success in the wake of the bigger "Bad Girl" titles. In particular, the value for nude covers and other manufactured collectibles has begun to fall, with many of those issues being worth far less than the arbitrarily high retail value that the publishers put on those comic books upon publication.

Prices for some venerable independent titles like Elfquest have slipped slightly. Some retailers theorize that this is largely because these titles have been around for so long that those who want the back issues have them, which results in minimal activity on the back-issue market.

Often, when there's minimal activity, retailers drop prices a bit to see if there's an audience for those comic books at a lower price.

This is nothing new: Many comics, from both independent and major publishers, go through these price-levelling phases.

There's a very strong interest in Kurt Busiek's Astro City, with fans trying to track down both the original mini-series and first printings of the new ongoing series. This title has attracted new readers steadily, which means that there's an ample audience base for back issues (even though the mini-series is available in trade paperback). It seems very likely that KBAC will continue to climb steadily as new readers discover this fascinating comic book.

Randy Queen's Darkchylde is one of the hotter recent titles. Readers are clamoring to find the early issues of this series, driving prices higher. And another "dark" title, The Darkness from Image, continues to escalate in price. The first two issues of this comic book sold out within days of publication, which left a lot of unsatisfied demand. It doesn't seem that prices have topped out yet on either series.

PRICE GUIDE

Independents D-G

The prices given here are for near-mint comics. This is the most acceptable and general condition a collector desires for newer comics. A near-mint copy is almost perfect — with almost no signs of wear or aging. There might be one or two tiny defects discernable only on close examination (for example, an extremely slight flaking on the spine).

The condition of comics is a vital factor in determining comics values. The primary conditions used in grading are "poor" (undesirable in most collections), "fair," "good," "fine," and "mint." Other grades, including the "near-mint" we use, are steps between these. A "fair" issue would be worth about 20% of our price. A "fine" issue would be worth about 60% of our price. And a "mint" copy would be worth 120% of our price.

Note: Changes that occurred between our last CBG Price Guide and this one are indicated by a + or - sign. Prices that went up from our last issue have the + sign by the title. Prices that went down from our last issue have the - sign by the title.

Why are there shaded areas in the price guide?

We shade certain titles to call attention to price changes, character appearances, and other interesting facts, with many of these trivia tidbits indicated by the heading Didja know?

For example, didja know that Darerat/Tadpole is just one of Mark Martin's series of Frank Miller/Batman parodies?

Or didja know that Deathmate was one of the first amalgam titles? Jack Abramowitz has more information on this in next week's issue (#1221).

What would you like to see in the price guide? Send your comments and questions on this section to Brent Frankenhoff, CBG Price Guide, 700 East State St., Iola, WI 54990.

SUPER TRADERS

Super Trader ads are available for $108.00 each. Super Traders are designed by the advertiser on 8-1/2" x 8-1/2" paper. We reduce the ad to 5" x 5" size. Super Trader ads are a low cost form of advertising. Because of this, CBG does not typeset, screen photos, add logos, artwork or credit card symbols to Super Trader ads.

Ever dream about finding a collector selling his books at a great price, and getting first crack at them? See, dreams do come true!

TRADERS

Trader ads are available for $40.00 each. Traders are designed by the advertiser on 8-1/2" x 8-1/2" paper. We reduce the ad to 3-1/4" x 3-1/4" size. Trader ads are a low cost form of advertising. Because of this, CBG does not typeset, screen photos, add logos, artwork or credit card symbols to Trader ads.

TRADERS

Trader ads are available for $40.00 each. Traders are designed by the advertiser on 8-1/2" x 8-1/2" paper. We reduce the ad to 3-1/4" x 3-1/4" size. Trader ads are a low cost form of advertising. Because of this, CBG does not typeset, screen photos, add logos, artwork or credit card symbols to Trader ads.

TRADERS

Trader ads are available for $40.00 each. Traders are designed by the advertiser on 8-1/2" x 8-1/2" paper. We reduce the ad to 3-1/4" x 3-1/4" size. Trader ads are a low cost form of advertising. Because of this, CBG does not typeset, screen photos, add logos, artwork or credit card symbols to Trader ads.

Trader Tips

The Trader ads in CBG are an easy and economical way to advertise. Simply design your ad in a space that is 8½" wide by 8½" high and send it along with payment ($39.00 per Trader space) and complete reference form to:

COMICS BUYER'S GUIDE
Advertising Department
700 E. State Street
Iola, WI 54990-0001

We'll reduce your ad to the proper size and place it in the issue(s) you request. If no specific issue(s) is requested, we'll run your ad in the next available issue.

Keep in mind that the better your ad looks when you send it to us, the better it will look when it is reduced and published in CBG.

TRADERS

Trader ads are available for $40.00 each. Traders are designed by the advertiser on 8-1/2" x 8-1/2" paper. We reduce the ad to 3-1/4" x 3-1/4" size. Trader ads are a low cost form of advertising. Because of this, CBG does not typeset, screen photos, add logos, artwork or credit card symbols to Trader ads.

Hi! Check out what I hope will be the first of many ads in CBG. I want your business so I'll give you great books at great prices and make every book returnable if you're not satisfied. Don't assume anything is sold until you call. S&H is $4 per order.

* Special Section ....

The advertisers' index is provided as a reader service. Occasional last minute changes may result in ads appearing on pages other than those listed here. The publisher assumes no liability for omissions or errors.

GENERAL INFORMATION

A. PAYMENT: Ads must be accompanied by payment. You may pay with a check, money order, or credit card.

B. CREDIT CARDS: We will accept the following credit cards: VISA, MasterCard, American Express, Discover.

C. DEADLINE: For all advertising is 4:00 p.m. each Tuesday, unless otherwise stated on deadline card.

D. TERMS: Cash with copy only. All advertisers must provide information for the confidential use of the publisher should questions arise.

E. CONTRACT RATES are available for 6, 13, 26, or 52 consecutive issues. Contract rates apply to fulfillment of contract items. Cancellation of a contract by the advertiser allows the publisher to reinvoice covered ads at the earned rate. This rate card is a part of the advertising contract.

F. MINORS are required to furnish a statement of responsibility from their parent or guardian before their advertising can be accepted.

G. ERRORS: Typewritten copy is recommended. The publisher is not responsible for errors resulting from long-hand or illegible copy, or changes submitted by telephone. The publisher's liability for any error shall not exceed the cost of the space occupied by that error.

H. LAYOUT and design services are provided by Krause Publications for advertisers who do not submit camera-ready copy. Due to the creative and subjective nature of these services, credit will not be allowed for conceptual variations.

I. GRADING: Items offered in any ad must be properly described as to condition, conforming to the standards set forth in Comics Buyer's Guide Price Guide. Advertisers may also exercise the option of grading offerings by applying a unique personal system, providing the standards applied are detailed in the ad to avoid confusion.

J. RETURN PRIVILEGE: Except as otherwise specified in any ad, an advertiser must accept the return of any merchandise postmarked within ten working days of its receipt by a customer.

K. P.O. BOX ADS are allowed, but the permanent home address, phone number and place of business of the advertiser must be filed with the publisher before advertisements may be printed.

L. SPECIAL PAGE POSITIONS are available at a premium, inquire for details.

M. ADVERTISING AGENCIES: There are no agency discounts.

N. CAMERA READY display ads qualify for a 15% discount. Copy must be ready for camera without additional paste-up or film work required. No charge for reproductions, enlargements or mail response key change. Classified Display, Comics Trader, Collector's Showcase and classified word ads do not qualify for the camera ready discount.

O. SPACE RESERVATIONS available for camera ready ads only. Must be made prior to ad deadline. Reserved space must be paid for even if ad does not arrive on time.

P. PRE-PRINTED INSERTS are available in Comics Buyer's Guide. Inquire for additional information and technical specifications.

Q. CIRCULATION is throughout the United States and Canada by subscription and single copy sales by agents in shops and other outlets.

R. PROOF OF PUBLICATION: Tear sheets of new display ads are mailed to those advertisers requesting this service. We regret we cannot provide this service to classified advertisers.

S. NOTE: All advertising orders are accepted subject to the terms and provisions of the current rate card. Krause Publications, Inc. reserves the right to decline advertising or suspend advertising privileges for such periods of time as in its discretion it sees fit, for any reason, whatsoever, irrespective of the validity of the reasons for such declination or suspension. The forwarding of an order is construed as acceptance of all rates and conditions in effect at the time the advertising is submitted. The publisher will not be bound by any conditions, printed or otherwise, appearing on any order for advertising space, billing instructions or copy instructions which conflict with its policies. Advertisers and advertising agencies assume liability for all content (including text representation and illustrations) of advertisements printed, and also assumes responsibility of any claims arising therefrom made against the publisher. It is the advertiser's or agency's responsibility to obtain appropriate releases on any item or individual pictured in their advertising. All agreements are subject to strikes, accidents, acts of God, or other contingencies beyond the publisher's control. The publisher reserves the right to edit any advertising copy to conform with its standard advertising policies, and to reject any ad which in its opinion is unethical or objectional for any reason.

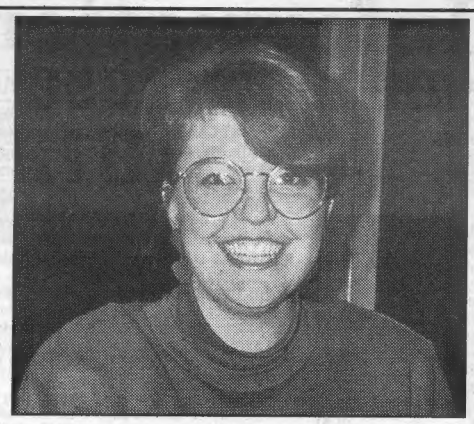
When I saw Kim at the convention, I was sure she was going to beat it.

It was at I-Con, if I'm not mistaken: An annual science-fiction convention which has been held for the last 10 years or so in Long Island. And there was Kim Yale, smiling and determined and wearing a hat, and there seemed to be no doubt — at least outwardly — that she was going to lick this cancer thing.

And she didn't.

Her husband, John Ostrander, would keep people apprised of Kim's status via CompuServe. That's one of the miracles of computerization: Bad news can now be delivered with greater speed than ever before. In our little comic-book and on-line community, we shared in the ups and downs as Kim continued her battle against this pernicious disease.



Kim Yale, during her tenure at DC.

Cancer used to be something that was hushed up. For some reason, there was something secretive about it, almost as if society considered it sinful. Perhaps because, once upon a time, the very word was tantamount to a death sentence. You couldn't even say it. Newspaper obits (of which I wrote quite a few during my journalism days) wouldn't read, "So-and-so died of cancer." Instead it would say, "So-and-so died after a lengthy illness."

But nowadays, we're made of sturdier stuff. Besides which, now we have other diseases for society to consider "sinful."

I wish I'd known Kim better. I talked with her occasionally, worked with her fleetingly, and was always impressed by her charm, her pleasant disposition, and her professionalism. We'd see each other at conventions or on those rare occasions when I would swing by the DC offices during her editorial tenure there.

But I didn't really know her. Not really.

And I wish I had.

You want to have someone to complain to, you know? You want an office where you can stand in line and have a face to crab at, someone from whom you can demand explanations. You want to know why this stuff happens. Why do we lose the Carols and the Marks and the Kims? Why are we losing the good ones, and so damned young? It isn't supposed to be this way. Why did Kim have to go and why does John have to be alone? It's not right, and sometimes the world is just so bleak and so hopeless, you just wonder if anything is right anymore. Rather than cherish those who are still with you, you just look around you and wonder who's next.

And you wrap your blanket around you at night or your coat around you tighter when you're outside, and there's still a chill air cutting through you just the same.

I'm sorry — I just don't feel like talking this week. I mean, I could. I desperately want to try, to write a lengthy column extolling the virtues of Kim's life because she deserves it. But in my current mood, I'm afraid that I'll just fill up an entire page with pointless verbiage that sounds semi-coherent and maybe even vaguely profound, but that's just insulting to you and a waste of everyone's time. I'm just kind of mad at the universe right now for a whole lot of reasons, and maybe next week we'll be on speaking terms, but right now, the universe and I are on the outs and it's probably wiser if I just shut up.

Peter David, writer of stuff, offers his condolences to the family and loved ones of Kim Yale.
